Blair sighed. “He already knows. I’m guessing that he will take action soon. I’m afraid there won’t be any peace to speak of in the coming days. You must be vigilant while you’re in the imperial capital. You’ve been the Alpha of the border pack for five years, and the vampires hold a lot of grudges against you. Some of them might even be very familiar with your identity. If you’re not careful, you might get exposed to Rufus.”

Crystal’s POV:

My daughter couldn't seem to accept that fact that Rufus had suddenly left. She was so distraught that she even refused to eat her favorite cookie. She kept looking out the window in morose silence, her chin resting on her tented hands.

Crystal's POV:

In the following two days since Rufus had left the imperial palace, nothing significant had happened. As for me, I only needed to go to the kindergarten in the morning. My son and I would then spend the rest of the day in our own palace, or go and pay Laura a visit.

Today, it snowed. Arron and I decided not to go out. Instead, we sat in front of the fireplace and ate roasted sweet potatoes.

"This is yummy. I'm sure Beryl will like it." Arron blew at his sweet potato.

"Mommy will send some to your sister and grandmother later," I said as I took a big bite of my own sweet potato, and then put another piece into my son's plate.
