Chapter 521 Fight In The Castle

Sylvia's POV:

When Hobson was still panicking, I quickly turned into a wolf and ran through the door.

Title of the document

All of a sudden, a shrill sound rang in the air. It was so loud, almost as if it would pierce my eardrums. It sounded like the screams of a thousand bats.

That was probably Hobson's special power.

Unable to withstand it anymore, I returned to my human form and squeezed my ears shut. But the shrill noise seemed to pierce through my brain and crush my soul.

I closed my eyes and tried comforting Yana in my mind. Poor Yana was terrified.

"How did you know about the passage to the attic?" Hobson's angry voice thundered from behind me.

I whirled around to glance at Hobson, only to find that he looked even weaker. Maybe it was because he had used his special power.

Truth be told, he looked almost lifeless. "You are dying," I said flatly.

My words seemed to hit a sore spot for Hobson. He gritted his teeth and growled, "As long as I drink from your blood, I'll live." Really?

Chapter 523 Confrontation Between the Two Sides

Flora's POV:

Because Geoffrey himself gave the order, the gatekeepers had no choice but to walk towards the gate in an orderly fashion.

Title of the document

With a loud creak, the gate slowly swung open. Through the opening, I could already see that many werewolves on the other side of the wall had gathered. They must have been attracted by the commotion we had made earlier when we fought off the guards.

Their faces were pale and thin, their eyes sunken and lifeless. Old and young werewolves alike, no matter their age, they all shared a similar look.

I couldn't help but turn around and look at the werewolves who lived inside the wall. They were all well-dressed. Some even wore a hat and a tie to breakfast, which made them look inexplicably affluent and formal. I also noticed the looks on their faces. They all glared at the werewolves outside the wall with disdain. Some of them even took out clean, perfumed handkerchiefs to cover their noses, as though they could smell the werewolves from the other side of the wall.

Warren quietly took the petition papers from my shaking hands.

He was like a stronghold as he stood in front of me, shielding me from those judgmental, disdainful gazes.

"You don't have to be afraid of Geoffrey, okay? We're here to protect you," Warren said firmly to the werewolves outside the wall.

"Yes! We represent the royal family. We're on your side," I added loudly.

But nothing we said worked. The crowd began to disperse, some of them even walked away directly.

Geoffrey's POV:

Seeing all those children from the orphanage, I almost couldn't believe my eyes. "What's going on? Who let these kids out?"

A swarm of soldiers were chasing after the children. It was utter chaos.

With bloodshot eyes, I grabbed a weapon from a sold*ier and moved to stab a child who was about to step out of the gate.

As I raised my weapon, a frail she-wolf rushed to the child at an incredible speed and bore the brunt of my attack. The moment the spear pierced through her heart, a silence descended over the crowd.

Geoffrey's POV:

I was shocked to see the shame on everyone's faces when they heard Flora's words.

Title of the document

This was the first time I had ever seen regret and hesitation on their faces. A frisson of unease unfurled within my belly. "Mind your own business!" I glowered in Flora's direction, and then instantly ordered the sold*ier to gag her.

Warren kicked the sold*ier away and placed himself in front of her like a protective shield. "How dare you hurt her?"

Flora's POV:

Geoffrey's dirty tricks infuriated me. If Warren hadn't pulled me from behind, I would've rushed at him and beat the living crap out of that man.

While I refused to believe that Geoffrey was really controlling Rufus, it was true that Rufus never showed up. This made my heart sink.

Just then, Geoffrey's subordinate ran over in a panic.
