Chapter 871 A Sad Frog

Harry's POV:

Joanna and I sat side by side in the cell, our hands bound by shackles.

I turned my face to look at Joanna, who was lost in thought, and apologized.

Her head shot up in surprise. "Why are you apologizing?" My lips curved up into a bitter smile. "I got you into trouble."

When Joanna heard my reply, she looked stunned for a moment before smiling. "Aren't we mates? Mates share weal and woe, remember?"

Feeling a little dispirited, I whispered, "Haven't you always refused to admit that you're my mate and wanted to reject me?"

I thought you had no idea since you looked like a happy idiot every single day." My temper flared

The look on Harry's countenance spawned what might have been a chortle from my throat. How amusing! It seemed as though blood was drained from his face, leaving only a soft trail of paleness.

"I assure you, Harry. Your eyes aren't deceiving you; I'm real."

My voice seemed to pull his senses back on ground. With haste and reluctance struggling whichever would surface, he rushed to me and eyed me carefully. He exclaimed, "Sylvia! I can't believe you're alive! But—well, this is good news!"

Otherwise, you wouldn't have chosen to ruin your life if you're left with many other choices. Your goal is to leave the capital city, so that everyone would condemn you, which makes it easier for them to forget you. Did I get it right?" Harry surprised me by his impressive deduction. ### Sylvia’s POV:

I couldn’t refuse Laura and finally agreed. Her face broke into a smile again. She took a bank card from her bag and tossed it in my direction. “This card is registered to your new identity, and there is a huge amount of money in the account. Don’t overthink it. It’s for my grandchild’s sake. By the way, I have also got you a new phone.”
