

Lost Our Pup After Domestic Abuse Chapter 10

What surprised me was that Sandra took the initiative to visit Gerald in the hospital.

When Sandra appeared, Gerald's parents looked at her with deep hatred, as if they were facing an enemy. The two families ended up fighting in the hospital.

Sandra, with her face torn, brought news. Either Gerald signs a criminal letter of understanding for Jonah, or Sandra would call the police to accuse Gerald of raping her.

The so-called relationship between them couldn't withstand a bit of pressure, when they met again, it was like fire and water.

Jonah had incapacitated Gerald. The two best friends had turned into bitter enemies.

Gerald looked at Sandra with a cold sneer. "Even if I have to serve time in prison, I will never sign that letter."

Disheveled and in a pitiful state, Sandra left the hospital. This well-maintained and charming woman had lost all composure since the incident was exposed.

Both sides were trying their best to put the other in a hopeless position. Gerald's parents and Sandra knew each other.

Because of this matter, the Clarke Family had lost all face and suffered significant business losses. All the resentment was directed at Sandra by Gerald's parents.

To this day, they continued to push all the blame onto her, just as they had once blamed me for the beatings I endured from Gerald. Sandra finally called the police!

This was just the beginning. The two families, which had originally had a relatively good relationship, were now at odds.

As long as someone called the police, regardless of whether there was evidence, they would have to take Gerald in for questioning to decide whether to file a case.

Gerald was hospitalized with serious injuries. On the same day, two police officers arrived to investigate, and in the end, under pressure, Gerald could only admit to his affair with Sandra.

In order to get Gerald to sign the letter of understanding for Jonah, Sandra used every method and insisted it was all true. They were like dogs biting each other.

When my parents learned of this news, they sighed and didn't say much. As for the application for a forced divorce I submitted to the court, it began processing a week later.

With overwhelming evidence, there was no need for Gerald to appear in court. The entire process went incredibly smoothly.

Because Gerald refused to sign the criminal letter of understanding, Jonah was charged with intentional injury with a knife and handed over to the prosecutor's office. In the end, Jonah was sentenced to seven years.

The Clarke Family didn't want money, nor did they accept apologies or reconciliation. They were solely focused on sending Jonah to were solely focused on sending Jonah to prison.

Faced with their determination, Sandra was left with no options. By this point, the two families were almost in a state of mutual destruction.

Next, I heard from others that a furious Sandra had allied with the business rivals of the Clarke Family to make a big deal out of the situation.

Sandra started a live broadcast, inviting the media to accuse Gerald of coercing and forcing her into a relationship with tears streaming down her face.

As the main character in the whole affair, Sandra's appearance attracted the attention of countless netizens.

In my view, what should have ended was reignited with Sandra's emergence. In the public eye, Sandra became the victim. The truth and lies no longer mattered, people were more interested in the spectacle of mutual accusations.

With the help of some opportunists, Gerald, who had been recovering in the hospital for three months, ultimately couldn't delay any longer.

Under public pressure, the police took him away from the hospital for questioning.
