Chapter 169

A burning pain erupted from her face. Cut off mid-speech, she was forced to swallow everything else she had wanted to say.

All that the crowd heard was a resounding slap.

Half of Vivian's face began to swell.

Everyone gasped in shock at what they had just witnessed. Then, they instinctively turned their head away. None of them dared to openly stare at Isabella again, for fear that Harold would get angry and slap them as well.

Vivian was stunned. It took her several moments to realize that Harold had slapped her.

Her face contorted in rage. Pointing a finger at Harold, she parted her lips to swear at him, "You useless..."

The other side of her face erupted in pain again just as she blurted the word "useless" once more.

Now, both sides of her face had become badly swollen.

"I'm your elder. How... dare you strike your elder!"

Vivian dared not curse again, having learned her lesson after getting slapped twice.

She looked at Harold in horror as she covered her swollen face with both hands.

Her face swelled so badly that she could barely speak.

"All you do is condemn your niece! Elder or not, someone like you is not deserving of my respect! I will rip out your mouth if I hear you disrespecting my wife again!" Harold thundered, his tone full of murderous intent.

Vivian stumbled back in fear. She did not dare to retort under Harold's chilling gaze.

Isabella, who was behind Harold, suddenly felt a wave of warmth enveloping her.

She recalled how Harold, at her most devastating moment, had suddenly appeared like a knight in shining armor and rescued her from the fire back then.

He's quite reliable sometimes! Isabella thought as she looked at Harold, who had his back facing her.

For a moment, she was love-struck.

“Despicable... Pauline! Benson! This is the child you've brought up. She dares to strike an elder. She lacks discipline!” Yulian exclaimed.

His face turned purple with rage at the sight of his wife's swollen face.

He could only turn to glare at Isabella's parents, as Harold was too strong.
