Chapter 291

Yolanda glanced at her phone. She still didn't know what was happening. "Are you hungry?" she asked Gavin.

"I can wait for you," Gavin said, shaking his head. We can have supper together."

"Okay." Yolanda smiled at Gavin. She would exhibit a fleeting gentle smile only when she was with Gavin.

Yolanda's phone rang again. This time, Riley had an obviously better tone, as if he was afraid that Yolanda would hang up once more.

"Yolanda, I don't have time to joke around with you. Can you get in contact with Mrs. Henderson or not?"

"Have you tried calling her?"

"Are you seriously asking me that? Both Mrs. Henderson and Yvonne didn't pick up their phones. That's why I had to call you."

"Yvonne's tuition class ends at 9:00 pm; Mrs. Henderson went for a hot spring trip and won't be back tonight."

The moment Yolanda finished speaking, there was a sharp inhaling sound over the phone.

Riley had worked in Henderson Group for a very long time. He would have heard of who Gavin was even if he was the most uncultured person around.

"H-hello, Mr. Savage. I was too anxious just now, so my tone was a little unpleasant. Please don't mind me."

"Hurry up and lead the way."

Gavin didn't have a good impression of scumbags who stepped on the weaker and cowered away from those stronger than them. At the same time, his impression of Harold had also drastically decreased.

One would really doubt Harold's judgment in hiring if he, as a CEO of a public- listed company, had an assistant who lacked both capabilities and manners like this.

"Okay." Riley didn't dare to be arrogant any longer. He wiped the sweat off his forehead and walked hastily into the hotel.

"Mr. Henderson had invited Mr. Andy Frick, the manager of Dunhill Group, here to buy him a meal and to talk about working together, but it's not going very well.

"For reasons unknown, Mr. Frick isn't talking about the project at all. Instead, he kept pressuring Mr. Henderson to drink."

Andy was a manager and a part of Dunhill Group's upper management team who had a say in things.

Dunhill Group's social status was similar to that of the Savage family in Riverdale city, so even if Yolanda had the support of the youngest son of the Savage family, the Savage family might not have sided with her at the expense of offending

Dunhill Group.

"Yolanda's too rash, but she only panicked because she saw how drunk Mr. Henderson was. Please don't get mad, Mr. Frick." Riley was bowing and apologizing to Andy to curry favor with him, but deep down, he felt very unsure.

He witnessed how bad Andy's temper could get. His getting Yolanda to come had made things worse.

"Harold's daughter?" Andy gave Yolanda a once over with a darkened expression.

After a while, he spoke gravely, "You're better than your coward of a dad, that's for sure, but who gave you the audacity to act up before me like this?"

Yolanda had injured his bodyguards right before his very eyes. To Andy, that was practically public humiliation.

"Since your dad had too much to drink, I'll teach you some manners on his behalf. "Kneel. Apologize to me." He propped his leg up and looked haughtily at Yolanda. He continued, "If you don't, I'll make you pay for offending me."

Gavin frowned slightly. He seemed to be displeased with Andy's apology.

"I'm sorry, Ms. Henderson." Andy's fists were balled tightly. It was way beyond his patience's limit for him to apologize voluntarily to two children.

It would be fine if it were Gavin since he was the future heir of the Savage family, but who did Yolanda think she was?

She was merely a daughter from a small, insignificant family. How dare she act like she swaggered before him just because she was Gavin's fiancée?

At the same time, Andy was very perplexed. Why would Gavin fall for such a frumpy and fat woman like Yolanda with such a mediocre family background?

"Fine, you can leave now."

Yolanda took Harold's pulse and realized that he had signs of alcohol poisoning, so she gave him a pill to sober him up.

However, for a situation like his, it would still be best to get his stomach pumped out at the hospital.

Yolanda didn't want to waste any more time. She waved her hand, gesturing for Andy to leave.

Even though it was nighttime, the line at the cashier was pretty long since there were many people in the emergency room that day.

It was almost Yolanda's turn when a group of people swarmed in abruptly from the outside. These people flocked around the medical staff, pushing the stretcher, and frantically headed to the emergency room.

The person on the stretcher had a huge patch of blood on his chest. His face was deathly pale, his eyes were tightly shut, and he had an oxygen mask on his face. His condition looked very critical.

Yolanda saw an unexpectedly familiar face in the crowd.

It was Joel.

"Jude, Jude! Hang in there!

"Jude!"

The one on the stretcher was Jude Kaufman!

"I'll go take a look."

Yolanda handed the payment invoice to Gavin and ran in the emergency room's direction.

When she arrived at the emergency room, Jude was already wheeled into the trauma room.

The doctor felt bad as well, but he couldn't bring back the dead. He shouldn't give Joel false, unrealistic hope.

"It's impossible! There must still be hope for my brother!"

Joel was suddenly reminded of Yolanda. He turned around and begged her frantically, "Dr. Henderson, please go have a look, please, save my brother!"

"I'll go in and take a look."

"Hey!" As Yolanda walked into the trauma room, Jude's attending doctor was stunned for a while before he chased after her angrily.

"Non-authorised personnel are not permitted in the trauma room! Get out!" Yolanda had already started examining Jude at that moment.

"Besides, she doesn't even qualify to perform surgery. If you don't believe me, ask her.

"Which medical school did she graduate from? How many years of practical experience does she have?"

"I've never gone to medical school, but I have a medical license. I can perform surgeries," Yolanda replied honestly.

"You heard her, Commissioner Kaufman. She has never been to medical school but has a medical license. Is there anything more ridiculous than that?"

"People like these are just attention-seeking frauds. I will not agree to letting her perform surgery on Mr. Kaufman."

"You've had rheumatoid arthritis for many years now, and it's very severe," Yolanda said out of the blue.

"What?"

The medical staff all around were shocked.

"H-How did you know that?" Jude's attending doctor was horrified.

"Dr. Gotham..." Liam yanked at Leon's sleeves and whispered, "Look at how she's preparing for the surgery. She actually looks pretty professional, huh?"

"What's the use of preparation work that just looks professional?" Leon huffed coldly.

"She might have just learned a little bit last time and is now just showing that off.

"She would have most likely just entered into medical school degree at her current age or is just in a pre-med course. The youngest genius I've seen in the field right now is only a physician's assistant at a similar age.

"Who does she think she is?"

Liam thought what Leon said made sense, so he didn't respond.

"What are you still standing there for? Have you prepared the surgical knives yet?"

Redoing the surgery meant that the surgical knives would also require changing.

After Yolanda finished her prep work, she noticed that Leon and Liam were still standing there like decorative pillars, staring blankly at her. She felt a little unhappy.

"Human life is at stake here. I don't care what you're thinking about, but you'd better take your role as physician assistant seriously. If not, get out, get someone else in here."

"I'd like to visit my brother now. When his condition is completely stable, I'll be sure to thank you officially."

Then, he bowed deeply at Yolanda once more.

"Go ahead. We need to go, too." Yolanda glanced at Gavin and saw the storminess on his face slowly subsiding.

"The paperwork is all done. Riley is there at the bedside with him. We can leave now."

"Okay."

Yolanda searched on her phone for street food nearby as she left the hospital.

"There's a pretty good kebab shop on the next street."

She had always liked street food in her previous life, but she rarely had the opportunity to get it.

Now that she had become Yolanda-the-ordinary-student, it was a lot more convenient for her to do so.

"You... You..." Seth stammered. He had initially thought that it would be quick and easy, but he didn't expect the both of them to be so skilled.

Just as he was about to call for reinforcement on his phone, Yolanda kicked him in the chest, causing him to grunt and collapse onto the ground.

"I don't care who sent you, but there's a steep price to pay for causing a delay to my dinner." Yolanda frowned. Displeasure was clearly displayed in her eyes.

She couldn't care less if the other person would call for reinforcements, but she didn't want to waste more time.

Seth was so shocked he could barely speak, but he still tried to reach for his phone, which had fallen nearby.

"Are you still not giving up?" Yolanda didn't want thugs to mob her in the name of revenge when she was enjoying her kebabs.

She was contemplating if she should knock him out when she heard sirens wailing coming nearer and nearer to their direction.

Soon, three police cars appeared, and according to how the siren sounded, it sounded like more were coming.
