A few seconds after Devin started the car, Becky came to her senses and asked, “Devin?”

“Yeah?” Devin answered her casually while driving, as if he didn’t understand what Becky meant.

The wind coming from the window kept blowing against her face, which sobered her up quickly. “Just forget about it, Devin.”

Becky and Rory had divorced a long time ago. Wasn’t it embarrassing to confront him because of Raina now?

“Why? Didn’t you say that you can’t let it go just like that?”

Devin snorted. Clearly, he wasn’t about to change his mind.

Frowning, Becky couldn’t help but press her fingertips against her aching temples. “There are so many things that I can’t let go. It’s impossible for you to solve all of my problems for me.”

“It’s not impossible. I’m willing to do it for you,” Devin answered without missing a beat.

Hearing this, Becky felt her heart race.

Becky had never let people bully her ever since she was a child. On the contrary, Jessie was quite timid as a child and didn’t dare to defend herself when other kids bullied her. Truth be told, Jessie wasn’t as bold and brave as she made herself out to be today.

It was Becky who asked Fred and Vernon to fight those bullies without thinking twice. In the end, Becky’s parents were summoned to the school to deal with this matter. Even then, Becky didn’t feel scared.

However, after marrying Rory, Becky kept suffering blow after blow. Even after the divorce, she still tried to swallow the humiliation.

The people around her wanted to vent her anger for her, but she had suffered too many grievances to count.

Becky thought Devin was just messing around. But he stopped the car in front of the hotel she left just now.

After pulling the car to a stop, Devin turned to look at Becky and said, "We're here."

Stunned, Becky didn't move.

Without giving her the time to react, Devin hopped out of the car and trotted over to the other side to open the door for Becky. "Come on."

Unfastening her seat belt, Becky frowned. "Devin..."

Devin reached out and helped her out of the car. "Don't worry. I'm here."

He practically dragged Becky into the hotel.

Devin took great strides, and Becky had to walk quickly to keep up with him.

Devin didn't stop until they were right in front of the front desk. "We're looking for Raina Morgan or Babette Morgan. Could you tell me which room they're in?"

It wasn't until Becky heard this from Devin's mouth that she realized he was dead serious about this matter.

While Becky was deep in thought, Devin glanced at her and asked, "Are you scared?"

Becky met his gaze and jutted out her chin bravely. "Of course not."

When had she ever been afraid of anything?

Hearing her response, Devin broke into a smile. "Good."

Just then, the receptionist found the room number. "Mr. Stanley, they are in Room 1606."

"Thank you."

Then, Devin turned to face Becky. "Room 1606. Shall we?"

It had been a long time since Becky felt provoked, so she nodded even though she knew Devin's question was rhetorical. "Of course."

Truth be told, she was interested in seeing how he would help her solve this problem.

Devin's grin grew wider. Without further ado, he turned around and walked towards the elevator, and Becky followed.

There was no one in the elevator. Devin strode in first and looked at Becky with a faint smile as if he was challenging her.

Becky plucked up the courage and stepped inside the elevator without hesitation.

Soon, they made it to the 16th floor. As the elevator doors slid open, Devin stole a glance at Becky.

Becky puffed out her chest and walked out of the elevator confidently. Finally, she stopped at Room 1606.

Becky turned to look at Devin and mimicked the smile he had on just now. "I wonder how you'll solve this problem for me."

Devin seemed to have expected this. He simply looked into her eyes and answered, "Aren't you angry that Rory used you to hide his feelings for Raina a secret for three years?"

Becky's eyes widened slightly.

To be honest, she didn't expect that Devin would know about this.

In the eyes of outsiders, she was coming at Rory as a jealous ex-wife who still loved him.

But Becky knew herself better than anyone else. She knew that she was angry because he had kept her in the dark for three years.

She was from the esteemed Ramos family.

While she could accept that Rory didn't love her, she couldn't accept that he saw her as a fool from the very beginning.

She was no fool. How could she let such an insult go?

Becky held Devin's gaze and asked softly, "So what are you going to do?"

Devin suddenly broke into a smile. Then, without answering, he took out his cell phone and dialed Rory's number.

Then he put the call on speaker for Becky to hear their conversation.

Several seconds later, the call connected.

After a long pause, Rory's cold and harsh voice broke the silence. "Devin?"

Devin glanced at Becky and smiled. He said into the phone, "I'm just a little curious. How important is Raina to you?"

"Devin, what the hell do you want?" Rory sounded angry.

"Well, I'm at the door of Room 1606 in JW Marriott. If you want to know what I want, why don't you come over and see for yourself?"

Without waiting for a response, Devin hung up abruptly.

He started typing on his phone and sent a message to someone. Afterward, Devin looked up at Becky again and said, "Let's go in."

Becky pursed her lips. She didn't understand what he was up to. "How are you so sure they won't kick us out?"

Raina might not know her, but she just slapped Babette in the face. Becky doubted they'd welcome her with open arms.

Devin chuckled. "Maybe Raina's waiting for you."

Before Becky could react, Devin raised his hand and knocked on the door.

"Yes?"

It was Babette who opened the door. Her expression changed at the sight of Becky and Devin.

Soon, the voice of another woman came from inside the room. "Babette, is that Rory?"

Hearing how intimate Raina called Rory, Becky suddenly felt a little ridiculous.

She remembered she once called Rory intimately. However, the response she got from him was an annoyed look.

Becky was so lost in thought that she didn't hear what Devin said to Babette. Next thing she knew, Babette stepped aside to let them in, revealing another woman standing inside the room.

"Let's go inside," Devin said, pulling Becky back to her senses.

Becky nodded and studied Babette's expression briefly. Seeing the unmasked hatred in her eyes, Becky couldn't help but smile. "We meet again."

Babette visibly stiffened and she subconsciously touched her cheek, which had been slapped by Becky not long ago.

Gritting her teeth, she let the two in and then slammed the door behind them.

It was the first time that Becky met Raina. Babette and Raina might've been sisters, but the two looked quite different. Babette was quite alluring and almost sensual, whereas Raina looked pure and innocent.

Raina seemed to be a bit nervous to see Becky. "Hello, Miss Ramos."

Becky smiled at her faintly and greeted her in kind. "Hello, Miss Morgan."

After saying that, Becky turned her head to glance at Devin.

She didn't know why she was here. Besides, it was inappropriate for Becky, Rory's ex-wife, to confront Raina, his girlfriend.

Devin smiled at Becky triumphantly. "See?"

Becky tilted her head to the side and gave him a questioning look. Devin continued, "I told you she isn't as beautiful as you."

After he said this, the two sisters understood what was going on.

All the color drained from Raina's face, while Babette's face contorted in anger. "Becky, please leave. You are not welcome here," she hissed through gritted teeth.

Truth be told, Becky didn't want to be here in the first place. However, Babette's hostility made her unhappy, so she decided to stay. "What if I want to stay?"

There was still a trace of Becky's palm print on Babette's cheek, which angered Babette beyond belief. Fortunately, before she could explode, Raina stepped in front of her sister and put on a smile for Becky. "What can I do for you?"

Seeing Raina's smile, Becky responded in kind and also smiled. "I think you also want to see me."

While Becky initially didn't want to deal with this matter, she was no fool.

She had divorced Rory more than half a year ago, and the matter regarding Rory's new girlfriend had nothing to do with her at all.

Rory had never loved her.

However, Becky was involved in a rumor with Rory just recently—a rumor which brought to light Raina's existence. Now that she knew about Raina, everything in the past made sense.

Besides, before even knocking on their door, Devin had mentioned that Raina was probably waiting for her.

And he was right. When the rumor came out, Raina expected Becky to come to her, but to her disappointment, Becky never came—until now.

What Becky said just now made Raina stiffen slightly, but she soon put on a fake smile. "I don't understand what you're trying to say."

Becky shrugged indifferently. "It doesn't matter. You'll understand soon enough."

"What the hell is that supposed to mean, Becky Ramos?"

Babette planted her hands on her hips, addressing Becky by her whole name.

Becky turned to look at Babette incredulously. These two sisters were ridiculous!

"I didn't mean anything by it. Raina has been back for a long time now, but it seems no one knows this."

What Becky said was something of a sore spot for Raina, and the latter couldn't help but lower her head slightly. The smile in her eyes was replaced by coldness.

Becky continued to smile at Raina and added, "I'm quite stubborn. I happened to have some spare time tonight, so I came to find the answers to some questions."

Since Rory had kept her in the dark for three years, Becky was determined not to let this matter go.

She couldn't believe they had fooled her the past three years. And for this, they had to pay.

As soon as Becky finished speaking, there was a knock on the door.

Rory came so quickly.

It seemed he truly loved Raina.

At that moment, Becky's phone vibrated, signaling a new message.

Becky lowered her head to check and saw that Devin had sent her a text just now.

It read, "The media is coming."

Once she finished reading, Becky raised her head to look at Devin who was also gazing back at her. She smiled. "This is really considerate of you."

Devin's lips curved into a charming smile.

With a mocking smile, Becky averted her gaze and glanced toward Raina.

Babette was the first one to run over and open the door. When the person's face was revealed, she was surprised at first, but then a big smile began to spread across her face. She sent Becky a triumphant glance before turning to Raina. "It's Mr. Casper."

Rory had told Babette not to call him "Rory" last time, so she changed the way she addressed him.

Raina's expression instantly changed at the mention of his name. Joy was evident in her expression.

Becky looked at Raina and Babette with a smile. However, the moment Rory walked in, the smile on her face started to fade.

Rory entered and saw Becky and Devin standing together, making him feel a rush of displeasure.

He furrowed his brow. Walking over, he glanced at Becky before finally resting his gaze on Devin. "What is it that you're planning on doing?"

"Nothing," Devin replied. "It's just that Becky has something to talk about with you in person."

Rory turned to stare at Becky with a frosty look. "What are you trying to do?"

As she met his gaze, Becky replied calmly, "There are just some things that I'm still confused about, so I came here to figure out the answers myself."

"We're already divorced, Becky."

Rory had no idea what Becky was trying to do here. He was already annoyed by the fact that she and Devin came to find Raina in the middle of the night.

"I know it far better than you do, so there's no need to remind me about it." The smile immediately dropped from Becky's face, and in the next moment, a cold look appeared in her eyes. "However, the fact that we are divorced will not prevent me from finding out the truth."

"What truth are you talking about?" Rory asked with a frown, obviously trying to restrain his anger.

Becky sent a glance towards Raina, who was standing behind Rory and decided to go straight to the point. "Did you marry me so you could protect Raina?"

Rory did not expect Becky to ask such a question. His expression darkened even further, and his rage was already evident at this point. But just as he was about to open his mouth to say something, Becky continued, "I don't need any sort of explanation from you. Just answer me with either a yes or a no. I believe that it won't be difficult for you to answer the question."

Becky's tone was cold and indifferent, and she was staring at Rory with a defiant expression.

Rory couldn't believe that he felt provoked by Becky's words for the first time. He let out a scoff in response. "All right, then. So you're here to humiliate yourself, aren't you?"

Humiliate herself?

So he admitted it!

Becky suddenly burst into laughter, but the amusement didn't reach her eyes.

"You had the audacity to deceive me for three years!"

Rory's expression revealed his displeasure with the way Becky was looking at him, and he frowned.

When Becky noticed it, she stopped sneering and stared at Rory with a blank expression. "You've done a lot for Raina. Well, I'll help the two of you."

After then, Becky walked by Rory on her way out of the hotel room.

Having Rory there gave Babette a boost in self-assurance. As she stared at Becky's retreating figure, she murmured, "Is she out of her mind? Why did she come here to say some meaningless words?"

However, no one responded to her.

Raina stepped up to Rory with her eyebrows knitted together, seeming to be guilty and anxious. "Rory, Miss Ramos seems to be in a bad mood. Why not go and check on her?"

Rory turned his head and glanced at Raina before saying, "We are divorced."

As Rory continued to speak, the expression on his face became even colder. "If Becky comes to you again, just ignore her. It is quite late. Get some early rest."

As Raina watched Rory go away, she said with some reluctance, "Rory."

Seeing that she wanted to say something more, Rory scowled and said, "Anything else?"

Raina pursed her lips. "I'm still worried about her. How about I walk you off? This way, I can check on her."

Rory didn't want Raina to mind Becky's business. But since she wanted to show concern for Becky, he didn't want to dissuade her either.

"It is up to you to decide."

Raina gave a little nod before turning to Babette and saying, "Babette, Rory and I are going to see Miss Ramos."

When Babette heard what Raina had to say, she became even more enraged than she already was. "Why would you do that? Don't you realize that she has no interest in spending time with you?"

Raina didn't seem to care. "I don't mind."

She walked up to Rory and added, "Let's get going, Rory. Miss Ramos should still be nearby."

Rory couldn't bring herself to say no to Raina's request when he thought that Devin and Becky were together.

When Becky and Devin exited the hotel, the reporters Devin had arranged were already there.

Since Devin hired the reporters, the focus of the questions was on Rory and Raina.

Becky did not want to have anything to do with Rory—not even appear on the news together.

But she couldn't let go of the fact that she had been kept in the dark for three years.

Seeing that she didn't say anything, Devin gently tapped her on the shoulder to bring it to her attention.

Becky turned around to gaze at Devin and bit her lip. Then she gave the journalists a warm grin. "I came here to visit Rory's new girlfriend. Oh, not his new girlfriend. She has been his girlfriend for many years."

After a little pause, Becky continued, "I didn't mean anything else. All I want to know is what a wonderful lady she must be for Rory to have loved her for so many years. I don't want to be offensive, but I don't think she is as pretty or as affluent as I am. So it's beyond my comprehension that he has loved her for such a long time. In any case, I believe that the love that they have is genuine.”

While Becky was speaking, there was a gentle smile on her face.

When Devin saw Rory and Raina exiting the elevator, he turned around and gestured in their direction, saying, “Look, Rory and his girlfriend.”

As soon as they heard it, the reporters hurried over there.

Rory and Raina heard Becky's words as they exited the elevator. Rory's face instantly darkened. Unconsciously, he wished to stop reporters from taking pictures of Raina for some reason.

It was not that Rory didn't want Raina to be known to others. Rather, he didn't want her to be referred to as his girlfriend.

Nevertheless, as soon as Rory took Raina by the wrist, Devin said, “Look, Rory and his girlfriend.”

Rory could sense Devin's sarcasm in his words despite the fact that they were more than ten meters apart.

Many journalists raced over. When Rory turned around to walk away, the elevator doors had already closed.

Raina glanced at Becky and the corner of her lips raised covertly. However, she had a bewildered and terrified expression as she turned to face Rory. “Rory.”

Rory scowled when he noticed that she was grabbing the hem of his shirt.

He extended his hand and yanked her hand away. Raina, however, instantly grabbed his wrist.

Reporters who happened to be there at the moment captured the event on camera.

“Which business do you represent?”

Rory drew Raina behind him as he cast a chilly glance at the journalists in front of him.

What occurred tonight would go viral online. More than ten reporters were there and they hurled questions at Rory and Raina one after the other.

“Is this woman your girlfriend, Mr. Casper?”

“Miss Ramos said this woman is your true love, Mr. Casper. But why didn't you marry her back then?”

“Mr. Casper, since you divorced Miss Ramos and this woman is your real love, are you going to marry her?”

When Raina heard these inquiries, she unconsciously turned to look at Rory.

Rory, though, remained silent. He had a frigid look as he stood amid the reporters. He briefly glanced at the reporters in front of him before turning to face Becky and Devin.

Becky was wearing a smile as she looked at Rory and Raina, but it didn't reach her eyes.

When Becky met Rory's gaze, she scoffed, turned to Devin, and said, “I'm going back.”

Devin raised his eyebrows and turned to face Rory while feigning a grin. He then followed after Becky.

Soon, he caught up to Becky.

Becky and Devin strolled side by side until they eventually disappeared from Rory's view. He became irritated, and his eyes filled with rage.

Rory remained silent and just stared out into the horizon, and the reporters were afraid to press him. They followed his line of sight and discovered that he was staring at Becky and Devin.

They looked at one another, thinking that what had transpired today would be breaking news.

“Are you gazing at Miss Ramos, Mr. Casper?” a bold reporter asked.

When Raina heard this, she frowned, reached out, and grabbed Rory's shirt. “I want to go back.”

Withdrawing his gaze, Rory gave each reporter a chilly glare. "If you publish what happened today online, I'll make sure that your companies go bankrupt."

After that, Rory turned around, pressed the elevator button, and walked in with Raina.

The harshness in Rory's eyes terrified the reporters as they stood there. Rather than following them, they took pictures.

These reporters didn't realize they needed to follow the couple until the elevator doors were shut. However, the security guards came at this moment and began to drive them out.

Devin caught up with Becky in a few steps. He turned to look at her sideways as he asked with a smile, "Are you feeling better now?"

His voice caused Becky to turn and look at him. A smile took its place on her lips as she said, "Yes, I am."

Actually, she wasn't sad; she just couldn't swallow her anger.

But Rory's conflicted gaze before she left made her feel great.

Rory and she had been married for three years, but he had never looked her in the eye.

Every time she had a conflict with Denise and Babette, Rory would ask her to apologize without asking about what happened.

And every time he looked at her, his eyes were cold as ice. Just now, however, when he looked at her, his eyes filled with disbelief and anger.

Becky actually felt happy as she thought of it.

She knew she had changed. In the past, she had put up with anything if Rory was even a little nice to her. But now, she felt that she would be happy when he was unhappy.

She was no longer willing to submit to such treatment and insults. But it was possible that there could be love that caused all this hate.

Yet, she had to admit that the pleasure of revenge was great.

Becky couldn't help but laugh at this thought. She looked at Devin with a smile and said, "Thank you."

If it weren't for Devin, she wouldn't have made such a scene tonight.

Becky's smile deepened Devin's own smile.

They walked up to the car before Becky asked, "Devin, would you mind driving me back?"

"With pleasure. But..." He paused before continuing, "Would you be interested in doing something bad with me?"

"What bad thing?"

Becky looked at him with great interest. She never knew why she was always so interested in what Devin had to say.

Devin gave her a mysterious smile, took her hand, and said, "Come with me."

Becky didn't refuse him and followed him instead.

Devin didn't go far. He merely took a few steps before coming to a stop. He turned around and looked at her with a smile. "Do you know whose car this is?"

Becky looked at the license plate and raised her eyebrows as she said, "Rory's."

Rory was probably obsessive-compulsive, which explained why he had chosen a number that was easy to remember. Becky had seen his license plate so many times, she could tell it was his at one glance.

"Smart," Devin said appreciatively.

He then pulled out a small military knife and handed it to her. "Will you?"

In high school, Becky had also slashed the car tires of people who had annoyed her. She had felt great at the time but now, she felt it to be a little childish.

Becky hadn't done such a thing in many years, but she was a little tempted when she saw the knife in Devin's hand.

“Too childish, isn’t it?” Devin said, smiling. He then stabbed the tire with the knife and handed it to her. “But it will make you feel great.”

Becky took the knife and stabbed the tire on the other side.

Devin was right. It did make her feel great!

Thinking that one cut was not enough, Becky attacked the tire with full force, stabbing it over and over again.

She then followed Devin back to the car, her heart pounding, before they drove away.

As they pulled away, Becky smiled as she looked at the car in the rearview mirror.

Rory deserved it!

Ding! The elevator doors opened. Rory looked over to Raina, who was standing close by, and said, “You may leave now.”

He continued standing in the elevator after making that statement.

Raina looked at Rory and asked, “Rory, the hotel is surrounded by reporters. I think you should come in and have a seat.”

“No, I’m good. Feel free to go.”

Rory stretched out and hit the open button as the elevator doors were about to shut.

Once again, Raina caught a glimpse of his icy face. She was at a loss for words, and she walked hesitantly out of the elevator.

The elevator doors started to shut as soon as she stepped out.

Raina whirled around to see the doors as they closed behind her. Rory was lost in thought, and he didn’t look over at her once.

The softness on Raina's face was gone as soon as the elevator doors closed. A hint of resentment flickered over her face.

Rory's reaction to her return was quite different from what she had anticipated.

Raina returned to her room, clenching her teeth. Babette, seeing that she had opened the door, rushed forward to inquire, "Raina, how are things? Is it true that Rory has feelings for Becky?"

A frown formed on Raina's face at the sound of Babette's words. Raina's lips grew white because she pursed her lips for too long. "In my opinion, it is not the case. There were many reporters outside the hotel. Becky must have invited them over."

Babette was taken aback, but she quickly recovered and began laughing. "Isn't that favorable to you? It appears like Rory has no intention of taking you to meet his family, even though you've been back for some time. His family will soon know you're back thanks to Becky. We don't need to try and let Elmore learn of your return."

It was a positive development. Even though Raina nodded, she still looked a little worried. "Is he in love with Becky?"

"That can't be true. Why would they divorce if he loved her? Stop being so insecure! Men don't like women like Becky. She's just too headstrong and determined. You saved Rory's life. When your sickness worsened these years, he would go abroad and check on you. So long as he keeps thinking about how you saved his life, he won't leave you alone. Men might be far crueler than women, but they were more soft-hearted than women sometimes.

As a man, Rory fit that description. Since Raina had previously rescued him, he felt nothing but gratitude for her. Over time, he would come to appreciate her kindness, and he would eventually fall in love with her.

That was something Babette thought her little sister could pull off, at least. So many women had pursued Rory for so long, yet her sister was the only one who could stay by his side.

It was only a matter of time before the general public learned of her existence.

Losing face was a terrible thing in Elmore's eyes. Maybe he would just ask Rory to marry Raina to avoid their family becoming the laughingstock of the city.

But there was always the possibility of a different outcome. Life was a game of chance. One couldn't find out new things without taking any risks.

That Babette was correct was obvious to Raina.

Rory didn't refuse her back then because she pretended that she was unworldly, unimpressed by power or money.

Rory thought she was different from other women.

The elevator doors opened and Rory walked out, his expression sour.

The reporters were still there, and when they saw Rory, they surrounded him again. But Rory's expression was as cold as ice. A reporter made to ask him a question but shrank back at the look on Rory's face.

Rory walked out of the hotel and got into his car but didn't drive away immediately.

He remembered what Becky had said ten minutes ago as he had stepped out of the elevator.

In the empty hotel hall, Becky had told the reporters, "I didn't mean anything else. All I want to know is what a wonderful lady she must be for Rory to have loved her for so many years. I don't want to be offensive, but I don't think she is as pretty or as affluent as I am. So it's beyond my comprehension that he has loved her for such a long time. In any case, I believe that the love that they have is genuine."

The smile on her lips didn't budge as she said these words, but her eyes were devoid of all emotion.

The reporters had then spotted him and rushed to surround him and Raina. Becky had just stood there and looked at him, her smile turning cold.

To the onlookers, it seemed like Becky was watching a farce unfold.

Rory didn't like the mockery and contempt in her eyes.

He became irritated and uncomfortable as he remembered the look. A thorn seemed to be pricking his heart and he couldn't get rid of it.

He didn't like this feeling.

Rory lit a cigarette and leaned against the car window.

The smell of nicotine calmed him a little. The calmness didn't last long, however.

He snuffed out his half-smoked cigarette and drove away.

The car sped along the road.

But Rory soon realized that there was something wrong with the car. He slowed down and pulled over to the roadside.

It wasn't long before he found that the left tire was flat.

More looking made him realize that more than one tire had been punctured.

If he kept going like this, the car would stop in the middle of the road.

The flat tires annoyed Rory even more. He pulled out his phone, called Lowell, and asked him to have the car towed.

It took Lowell a long time to react when he heard this news.

He had just taken Rory's car in for maintenance last week. How had it broken down so soon?

Lowell was confused, but he quickly changed his clothes and rushed to Rory.

Becky and Devin had fallen quiet in the car. After a long silence, she turned to look at him and said, "I want to go back."

"Go back to the hotel?" Devin asked, his eyebrows shooting up in confusion.

Becky nodded. "Yes."

She paused, looking at the neon lights in front of her, before a faint smile crept up her lips. "I want to go back and see how unlucky Rory has gotten."

Devin was surprised. When he recovered to realize what she said, he smiled and said, "Great idea."

He then drove to the next intersection and took a U-turn.

He also wanted to see where Rory's car was.

That kind of a situation would definitely embarrass Rory.

As Rory drove out of the hotel, he could only turn left or right.

Devin had stabbed Rory's one tire and Becky had stabbed another tire a couple of times. Rory would have flat tires not long after he started the car.

Devin drove with Becky sitting by his side. At the next intersection, he made a U-turn. But they didn't see Rory's car when they reached the hotel. Apparently, Rory went the other way.

Devin drove past the hotel. After a while, Becky saw Rory standing by the road.

Although he had his back turned to the road, Becky could recognize him easily.

"Over there," Devin said to Becky, pulling over.

"Yes." Becky nodded. "I can see him too."

She smiled softly.

Rory was smoking a cigarette when Devin stopped the car next to him. The red light from the cigarette gleaned in the darkness.

When Rory turned and found out that it was Devin's car that had pulled over, his face darkened.

Slowly, the window slid down, revealing Becky's face.

She seemed indifferent at the sight of him.

"Hello, Mr. Casper." With a firm hand on the steering wheel, Devin turned the car around for a better view.

"Is your car broken?" he asked with a calm smile, but Rory could sense the sarcasm in his tone.

For this, Rory ignored him, saying nothing.

"Becky, how about we give him a ride? After all, he is an acquaintance." Devin still sounded cool, watching as the cigarette smoke puffed out of Rory's nostrils.

Becky leaned forward and narrowed her eyes at Rory's broken car. Her lips curved into a mischievous smile. "What does it have to do with me?"

More than a month ago, Becky's car had broken down, and Rory and Aiken had happened to pass by. Aiken had offered Becky a ride, but Rory had told Aiken to drive on, saying that her situation had nothing to do with him.

He believed that since they were divorced, their problems shouldn't matter to each other.

She had said that their divorce had turned them into strangers. Why should he care about a stranger?

Rory had been satisfied seeing Becky shivering in the cold wind at that time. He had glared at her through the rearview mirror with a smirk, taking delight in her misfortune.

Hearing the same words from Becky, Rory could imagine how she must have felt that day. The chills from the wind ate into his skin, and he shivered uncontrollably.

Rory's hand trembled and he struggled to hold his cigarette firmly. He looked Becky in the eye.

Becky looked away and said to Devin, "Let's go grab something to eat. I'm hungry."

Devin recalled what had happened to her that night. He now understood why she wanted to come back to see how Rory suffered.

It seemed that his future girlfriend was quite vindictive. But he loved the way she was. She wasn't a pushover, and this was a good thing.

Devin looked back at Rory and said, "I'm sorry I won't be able to give you a ride. I can't disobey the wish of my future girlfriend. Bye!"

Slowly, the car drove off.

The sight of Rory from the rearview mirror gave Becky an instant feeling of satisfaction.

As the car sped on, memories of the past flooded Becky's mind.

Rory watched the car until he could see it no more. He had mixed feelings. The cigarette in his mouth had lost its taste.

He knew they did it on purpose. But such realization didn't make him feel any better.

Standing there, Rory felt frustrated.
