The Casper family was quick to take action. By the time Becky had taken a shower, the news had been erased from the Internet.

The news had been removed, but what Becky had asked for was more than just that.

She had asked them to clear her name and clarify that she wasn't the author of the comic book.

Right now, only the news had been removed. They hadn't finished what Becky had asked them to do.

She smirked as she put the phone aside, turned off the light, and went to sleep.

If she didn't get a satisfactory answer from the Casper family tomorrow, she would not show any mercy.

Becky ended up having a good night's sleep.

The next day, Becky saw the Casper family's reply when she came out of the meeting.

The bloggers who had started the rumors had all made public apologies. They clarified that the comic book had nothing to do with Becky and that they had made up a story about her secret love for Rory in order to attract public attention.

Of course, people had different opinions about such public apologies.

Some believed it, and some didn't.

After all, Becky was not a popular star. Why were the paparazzi targeting her?

When there was a knock on the door, Becky put down her phone and said, "Come in."

It was Talia. "Miss Ramos, your father just called."

Becky's eyebrows shot up. "Is it about the news on the Internet?" she asked.

Talia nodded. "He asked me if the Casper family had done it."

Becky smiled. "What did you say?"

“I told him I didn’t know yet.”

“That’s it, then.”

Talia nodded, understanding what Becky meant. But at the thought of the so-called clarification, she couldn’t help but say, “The online apologies and clarification don’t seem to be working.”

Becky nodded and said, “I know.”

She paused before adding, “There’s no hurry. Let’s wait and watch what happens.”

If the Casper family was going to be so perfunctory, she would make them eat the bitter fruit of their own making.

Talia didn’t say anything to that. She merely nodded and left.

She had to admit that Becky knew the Casper family better.

The apologies and clarification had just been a warm-up. This afternoon, they did something more.

Becky didn’t know how Elmore had managed to make Raina and Babette admit their mistakes. But that afternoon, Raina suddenly posted a statement of apology, explaining everything that had happened the previous day. They cleared Becky’s name and said the comic book had nothing to do with her.

Raina’s apology was simple. It said that five years ago, she had gone abroad to recuperate because of an accident. On returning home, she learned that Rory had married Becky. They were divorced by that time but Raina was still jealous. So she spread the rumor that Becky was the other woman in Rory and her relationship.

To top it off, Raina had accidentally read the comic book, finding that it was quite popular. The hero in the book was very handsome and had a lot in common with Rory. To embarrass Becky even more, she made up a story and said that Becky was the author.

The statement was short and concise, but it convinced many people.

Becky couldn’t help but laugh at the statement.

“It looks like the Casper family paid a high price this time,” Becky murmured.

Becky was right. The Casper family had spent a lot of money to solve this problem.

Elmore had offered Raina a lot in order for her to take the fall.

Six months ago, the Morgan family's company had suffered a lot after Rory had sent Babette abroad.

Neither Elmore nor Rory had any intention of helping them. But this time, they agreed to help the Morgan family to solve the problems that Denise had caused. Elmore had not only promised Raina to help them solve the current crisis but also help them gain resources and connections over the next three years.

Raina had put forward an even more unfair condition for Elmore. If she got pregnant with Rory's child, Elmore needed to ask Rory to marry her.

Elmore became angry as he heard Raina's condition.

But Raina had learned to be smart. She knew that only she could satisfactorily solve the conflict between Denise and Becky.

Elmore saw that Raina was determined, and he left, simmering with anger. However, a few hours passed and public opinion still hadn't changed for the better. Elmore had been left with no choice but to ask Carl to contact Raina.

That was why Raina's statement and apology hadn't come out until afternoon.

Becky smiled at Talia's words. "Well, I'm not surprised."

Talia glanced at Becky before continuing, "Elmore punished Denise very harshly that night. She was whipped nineteen times, nine of which were done by Rory."

"Rory?" Becky said, her eyebrows rising.

Talia nodded. "A maid working for the Casper family said so."

Becky tapped her fingers on her cheek thoughtfully before smiling coldly. "I didn't expect Rory to do that."

Over the three years that Becky had been married to Rory, she had watched the Caspers spoil Denise to no end.

Rory was a cold man, but he had never refused Denise.

Becky didn't know if Rory and Denise were playing tricks together this time, or if Denise had done something to anger Rory too.

Either way, this had nothing to do with her.

She didn't want to hear anything about Rory anymore. She lowered her hand to pick up her pen and signed the document she had just read. "Okay. As I see it, this matter is over."

Talia nodded. "Yes, Miss Ramos."

Talia didn't like the Casper family either. The less contact Becky had with them, the better.

"This document is done. Take it to the marketing department."

"Okay."

Talia took the document and left the office, closing the door behind her.

But she returned soon, knocking on the door before entering.

Becky was reading a proposal when Talia came in. When she saw Talia return so soon, she smiled quizzically as she asked, "What's the matter?"

"Rory's secretary, Lowell, called me."

The smile on Becky's face faded. "What did he say?"

Talia relayed Lowell's words to her. "Rory wants to invite you to dinner, and Denise wants to apologize to you."

Becky snorted. "I don't have time for that."

"Okay," Talia said immediately, understanding what she had to do.

Saying thus, she turned around and made to leave.

As she watched Talia's retreating back, Becky seemed to change her mind.

"Wait a minute. Tell him I will go to that dinner."

Becky wanted to sever all ties with the Casper family, especially Rory.

However, they came to apologize to her. If she passed up the chance to see them humiliate themselves, all the shitty things she had suffered through in the past three years because of them would be in vain.

Right after she divorced Rory, Becky decided to let bygones be bygones. After all, she had gotten back at the Casper family once.

Much to her chagrin, Denise enjoyed going against her, and Rory became unreasonable and annoying.

Everything that had happened in the past three years was trivial for Becky at best. But everything that happened after their divorce left her sick to her core. One way or another, she needed to vent her anger on them.

Thus, Becky agreed to have dinner with them, intending to humiliate Rory and Denise.

By the time she arrived, Rory and Denise had already been waiting in their reserved private room.

A waiter opened the door for her and let her in. "Miss Ramos, Mr. Casper and Miss Casper are waiting for you inside."

Becky chuckled after hearing the waiter's greeting.

This was the first time that Rory ever waited for her.

The first thing she saw when she entered the room was Denise sitting next to Rory.

Compared to the past days, Denise looked less arrogant indeed.

"Have a seat."

Rory, on the other hand, remained the same. He still had the same stoic manner whenever he glanced at her.

Becky put her purse down and took a seat across from Rory. "Denise, you look unwell."

Usually, whenever Denise heard things like that, she would flare up. But surprisingly, she just replied, "You're right. I do feel a little unwell."

She wasn't lying. She was indeed feeling unwell.

But feeling unwell wasn't the reason that she didn't dare to talk back to Becky.

Elmore had punished her a few days ago. She had been whipped nineteen times. The punishment wasn't so severe as to make her hurt seriously, but she had been sleepless.

Moreover, Rory also whipped her that night. And because he was sitting next to her, Denise made no attempt to argue with Becky.

A smirk appeared on Becky's lips upon hearing Denise's response, and she raised her eyebrows. "Thank you for inviting me to dinner."

Becky was being sarcastic, but there was nothing Denise could do about it.

Forcing a smile, she glanced back at Becky and replied, "You're welcome."

Thereafter, Becky decided to stop goading Denise.

Roy passed her the menu and said, "Have a look at the menu and decide what you want to order."

The smile on Becky's face faded. She looked blankly at him while taking the menu from his hand.

At times, Rory could be generous. Not long ago, he didn't hesitate to give up a piece of land that was worth several billion dollars, and now he chose a restaurant that cost a fortune to eat at.

Becky didn't hesitate to order the priciest specialty dishes on the menu.

"I'd like this, this, and that one. Ooh, that looks good, too."

Becky ordered many dishes, and she was clearly doing it on purpose.

Denise found Rory just sitting there. She pursed her lips as she looked at Becky. She didn't dare say anything. Aggrieved, she merely lowered her head and chose to remain quiet.

The waiter, who was standing to the side, couldn't help but ask, "Miss Ramos, wouldn't these many dishes be a little too much for the three of you?"

Denise's eyes found Becky again at these words. If it wasn't for Rory's presence, she would have told Becky not to push it.

Becky smiled and said, "Oh, I forgot to tell you to pack the dishes I just ordered."

She paused and looked at Rory before continuing, "My friends are a little busy. They asked me to buy some food and bring it to them. I don't think you would mind, would you?"

Rory looked at her, his expression unchanging. "That's okay."

"Great!" Becky said cheerfully. She then pointed at two dishes and said, "Okay, I want these two dishes. As for the rest, you can ask them."

Becky was acting like she was the host.

Denise was angry, but she couldn't say anything. She then ordered three dishes.

Rory added a soup and a dessert.

When their order was done, the waiter breathed a sigh of relief. He had felt the weirdness in the air of this room as soon as he had entered it.

Now that the order had finally been placed, the waiter said with a smile, "Please wait a moment."

He hurried out of the room, leaving the three of them to themselves again.

Becky poured herself a cup of coffee and took a sip. She then looked at Rory and Denise as she asked them, "Do you want to talk about things before or after dinner?"

She put her cup down and pursed her lips before she answered her own question. "I think we should talk after dinner. I'm afraid you won't be in the mood to eat otherwise."

Rory looked at Becky. She was smiling but the smile didn't reach her eyes. Instead, her politeness had a chilling quality to it.

She seemed to be sure that their conversation tonight would not be pleasant.

Rory blinked at her before saying, "Then let's talk after dinner."

Becky smiled. "Okay."

They didn't have a common ground. Even if they did, no one would say anything.

Rory was a man of few words. Denise was angry but she didn't dare talk. Becky was not in the mood to talk to them. The room was so quiet that one could hear the sound of running water from the fountain in the lobby.

Fortunately, the dishes were served soon. The waiter broke the long silence as he brought the food in.

However, the atmosphere in the room was so depressing, the waiter, who had entered with a smile on his face, immediately became cautious as he approached the table.

"The dishes are ready. Please enjoy yourselves. Dessert will be served soon."

He carefully set the dishes on the table before leaving the room without a backward glance.

Rory looked at Becky and said, "Let's enjoy the food."

He had barely finished talking when Becky stood up and ladled herself a bowl of soup before sitting back down. She did not pay any attention to Rory.

It was just a meal. Did he think that she wouldn't dare eat if he didn't say that?

Becky took a sip of the soup and thought it was delicious. She suddenly felt that coming to the meal was worth it.

At least the food tasted good and would fill her up. It wouldn't be hard for her to swallow.

After Becky finished her soup, she picked up the fork and began eating as if Rory and Denise weren't there.

She didn't even give them a passing glance. The thought of them would probably ruin her appetite.

Rory turned his head to Denise. "Let's eat."

Denise sensed the shift in Rory's mood and chose not to make a scene. She then picked up the fork and began eating.

Becky loved the meal but Rory barely ate.

It was his first time eating dinner with Becky after they got a divorce. It was also his first time seeing her eat.

Becky swallowed and chewed her food slowly. Her every move was poised and filled with elegance. It was obvious that she was raised in a well-educated household.

Rory had never noticed that before because he never really paid attention to her table manners when they were still married.

It wasn't because they had never eaten together, but whenever they did, he never looked at her.

Sometimes when Denise and Babette poked fun at Becky, he would look at her. But she would have dropped her fork and smiled at him as if she hadn't heard what they said.

But apart from that, he never paid her much mind.

When Becky saw Rory staring at her, she ate another bowl of soup. She then took some wet tissues and wiped the oil stains from the corners of her mouth. When she noticed that he wasn't eating a lot, she asked, "It seems that you've lost your appetite. Is it because of me?"

He didn't know how to respond.

He didn't want to tell her the truth that he was mulling over the times when they were still married.

The fact that he thought about the past wasn't a good thing because that meant he still had feelings for her.

He never knew that he still had feelings for her until he started to remember all those small moments and interactions they had in the past.

Becky snorted when he didn't answer her question and squinted at Denise. "You're full by now, aren't you?"

Denise didn't eat that much either. Her mind was filled with anger and resentment when she saw Becky.

She came here today to apologize to Becky. She knew she shouldn't say anything snarky. Instead, she simply nodded and said, "Yes."

Becky smiled and looked at Rory again. "I think your brother is also full."

She paused for a moment and then said, "Perhaps we can now talk about the reason why you two invited me to dinner."

"We wanted to apologize."

What Denise did was evil.

That evening, Rory stayed up all night reading the comments under the post. They all said vile things about Becky and how she was the other woman between him and Raina.

The hateful comments and the thing Jessie accidentally said kept replaying in his mind. For the first time in his life, Rory felt that the Casper family, including him, had wronged Becky.

"Well..." Becky looked at him and asked, "So you want to say sorry?"

Rory was about to say sorry but when she suddenly cut him off, he fell silent.

Becky then continued, "There's no need to apologize. After all, Denise has said sorry many times. I'm already tired of hearing her apologize and I'm sure she's tired too. I figured that she had nothing better to do with her life than to keep apologizing to me. Maybe she should find other hobbies or interests instead of spending her time picking on me."

Becky's words echoed throughout the room.

Both Rory and Denise were speechless.

Denise looked at Rory and then at Becky but didn't say a word.

It was then that she suddenly realized that Becky hadn't come here to fight her. Becky was here to fight Rory.

And she was right.

The room fell silent again, but moments later, Rory said, "I'm sorry. Denise did cause you a lot of trouble."

Becky sneered. "You are wrong. It's not just Denise who has caused me trouble."

He did so too.

Becky smiled at him.

Rory sensed a hint of defiance from her set lips and determined eyes.

He suddenly realized that he didn't really know his ex-wife.

Becky had been gentle and kind after she had married into the Casper family three years ago. Every time she had an argument with Denise or Babette, she never hesitated to apologize to them in front of Elmore and Rory.

But tonight was different. Becky wasn't here to listen to their apology. She had shown her determination ever since she had come in, and it was obvious that every word she said was intended to satirize them.

She hadn't come here to accept their apology. She was here to embarrass them.

When Rory realized this, he felt the anger boiling up inside him. But what annoyed him more was the inexplicable depression at the bottom of his heart.

He looked at Becky, his expression darkening and his lips thinning. Coldness radiated off of him. Denise tried her best to shrink back and minimize her presence. Even if Becky were to point at her and scold her, she wouldn't dare speak a single word.

Becky's eyebrows shot up as she looked at Rory.

Just as she thought that Rory was about to get angry, his voice reached her ears. "I'm sorry. I did something wrong."

He shouldn't have thought that she was a bad woman. He shouldn't have treated their marriage like a game and ignored her feelings for him.

Becky was rarely stunned but this was one of those times. She hadn't expected Rory to apologize to her.

If the atmosphere had not been so tense and depressing, she would have laughed out loud and asked Rory if a demon had possessed him.

Was he really admitting that he had done something wrong?

However, it only took Becky two seconds to recover from her shock. She looked back at Rory and said, "You apologized, yes, but I don't need to accept it."

As she spoke, she picked up her purse and stood up. Her smile vanished as her gaze on Rory intensified. "I came because you said that you wanted to apologize to me. From now on, I hope that I will have nothing to do with anyone in your family."

Then, Becky turned and left.

She had come and heard their apology, but it was up to her whether to forgive him or not.

She didn't want to forgive them, and she wouldn't.

How could they hurt her?

And after all that, they were expecting her to accept their apology just so they could feel better about themselves.

Never!

A bitter, sarcastic smile crept onto Becky's lips at this thought.

The door to the private room swung open and closed. After Becky left, Rory and Denise were the only ones left the room.

If this happened in the past, Denise would have ranted about how annoying and manipulative Becky was.

But now she was quiet.

She believed that Becky was lying and thought that she liked Rory. She guessed that Becky only said that to play hard to get.

However, she didn't dare say anything about it because she was afraid of Rory.

Even though she had rarely seen him lose his temper, out of all the people in the Casper family, she feared him the most.

Rory often had a poker face on. His face always looked blank and expressionless. Whenever he stared at people, he would make them feel overwhelmed

Denise could still recall his face when he whipped her before.

However, today was different. His anger towards her made the room grow cold. She had never seen him this furious.

He sat there, motionless, with a blank expression on his face. His dark icy gaze seemed to pierce through people.

Denise felt a shiver run down her spine after she took a glance at Rory.

Although the two people fighting were Rory and Becky, Denise was the one who ignited the flames.

No matter how stupid Denise was, she was still a woman and recognized that Rory was acting a bit strange in front of Becky.

Yet, she couldn't quite put her finger on what caused it.

She noticed that Rory no longer ignored Becky like he did before they got a divorce.

Yes. It was that renewed attitude that made her realize that something was wrong.

As Rory's sister, she knew him well. He was neither kind nor affectionate. On the contrary, he was an apathetic person. He never showed even an ounce of kindness towards strangers and was especially cruel to the people he hated.

The only reason why Denise relentlessly picked on Becky was that she knew Becky used tricks to sleep with Rory. She also knew how much he loathed Becky.

But now, he was treating her fairly. He forced Denise to come and sincerely apologize to Becky. He even went a step further and said sorry to Becky.

Denise observed him for a while. She then came to a startling realization.

Rory had feelings for Becky!

After a few seconds, Rory abruptly turned his head to Denise and her whole body grew stiff.

Logically speaking, the weather wasn't chilly in April. However, Rory's icy glare made Denise's body freeze.

The way he stared at her made her feel like a soldier who was being interrogated and he was the general of the hostile country who could kill her at any given moment.

She dared not move an inch and tried to remain calm. "Rory, can I go home now?"

He looked at her and said in a cold voice, "If you even think of upsetting Becky again, whipping won't be the only thing I will do to you."

Her mind was now wrecked with guilt as she said in a trembling voice, "I... I promise I won't do it again."

Rory stared at Denise for a while and then looked away. "You can go home."

He needed time to think.

What Becky said made him speechless.

He never knew that he was a shameless person. Just as his father said, Rory was cold-blooded and cruel. He treated everyone the same and made no exceptions.

He had done a lot of horrible things, but it was the first time he felt sorry for someone.

It never crossed his mind if he had hurt others or if they would ever forgive him. Other people's feelings weren't important to him. All he cared about was his own happiness.

He had always been like this.

It was different now. When Becky didn't accept his apology, he felt disappointed deep down.

Disappointment.

He rarely felt that.

Moreover, what Becky said made his heart ache.

When Denise heard his reply, she let out a sigh of relief. She then quickly grabbed her purse and ran off. As soon as she walked out of the room, she saw a waiter pushing a dining cart.

Denise was stunned. She saw the stacks of boxes and suddenly remembered that those boxes were filled with dishes that Becky ordered.

In that moment, she wanted to throw away all the packaged food just so she could piss off Becky.

But before she could even decide what to do with it, the waiter had already pushed the dining cart inside the room.

Denise remembered that Rory was still inside the room and came back to her senses. She then walked towards the stairs and never looked back.

As soon as she reached the stairway, she ran into Becky, who had just left.

Now that she knew that Rory loved Becky, she didn't dare try and insult her.

Becky wasn't the same person that she and Babette could find fault with. She was the daughter of the richest man in Bluepond and was now the woman that Rory loved. So Denise could no longer insult her.

The thought of this gave Denise mixed feelings. She looked at Becky and then ran away from her.

When Becky saw Denise scamper off in a hurry, she raised her eyebrows.

It was weird. She couldn't tell if what she saw was correct. It looked as if there was a trace of fear in Denise's eyes before she ran off.

Was the Casper family's punishment that effective?

Anyway, it no longer mattered to her anymore.

Once she cleared her head, Becky went back to the room.

Earlier, when she got out of the restaurant, she remembered the food she had ordered for Louisa and the others. The food wasn't cheap and she wasn't the one who paid for it.

After a few seconds of hesitation, she got back up to get the food.

When she was in front of the door to the room, the waiter was just about to push the empty dining cart out.

Becky moved aside to let the waiter out and then entered.

Just as soon as she got inside, she saw several bags on the table.

Rory was still sitting in the room. When he saw that Becky had come back, he raised his head and looked at her.

Becky smiled politely and said, "I just came back to get the dishes."

She then grabbed the bags on the table.

Without even so much as a glance, she turned around and left.

For her, being civil with Rory was the best she could do.

They no longer wanted to see each other and were now strangers.

However, just as Becky walked to the door and opened it, she heard Rory's deep voice from behind her.

"Becky, you've loved me for a long time, right?"

Becky chuckled when she heard what Rory said. She turned around to get a good look at the man behind her. "Why should I even answer that question?"

Love involved two people, but she was the only one who felt that way in their relationship.

She admitted that she gambled away the happiness that she could have had in those three years. Now that she lost that game, all she wanted to do was admit defeat.

She never told anyone what had happened in the past.

It was just plain unnecessary and useless to relive it.

She then opened the door and left.

She didn't bother answering his question.

Rory figured that Becky not answering it meant yes.

The happiness he felt from that was indescribable. It was as if he was floating in the clouds. He wished that Becky hadn't loved him for so long.

He didn't enjoy being loved and he didn't love any woman.

She no longer cared about what Rory had in mind.

However, it wouldn't bode well for both families if they had a falling-out, so Becky decided to put up with it just this once.

But she had her boundaries.

If it happened again, Becky wouldn't let it go that easily.

Once she had calmed down, Becky took out her phone and sent a message to her friends. She then started up the car and drove to Otter Bar.

Louisa indeed asked Becky to bring them food. Because of the event that was happening in the Otter Bar, Jessie and their other friends went there to help.

Becky had no intention of going there today, but she hadn't heard from Jessie for two days despite the things that happened online. She guessed that Jessie might have gotten into trouble so she decided to go there and see what was up.

It was only seven o'clock when she got to Otter Bar. She went inside with the packed food and saw Louisa from a distance.

"Oh wow! The beautiful babe has arrived!"

Louisa had been running the bar for more than half a year now. She knew how to make people happy.

Becky merely took a glance at her and said simply, "Here's your dinner."

Louisa paused for a moment when she saw the bags in Becky's hands. She then asked, "You really brought food for us?"

Becky pretended to swipe the bags of food from her hands. "No, I came here to feed the dogs."

Louisa replied anxiously, "No! The food in that restaurant is expensive. It would be such a waste to give it to the dogs!"

Louisa quickly grabbed the bags and handed them to the person behind her. She then looked at Becky and smiled. "Alright, Becky. Today's event is quite big. Can you..."

Becky already knew what Louisa was about to say. Before Louisa could even finish her sentence, Becky replied, "No."

She looked around and asked, "So where is Jessie?"

"She's backstage learning how to DJ!"

It was only seven o'clock in the evening. The bar had just opened, so there weren't a lot of people inside. The DJ hadn't started playing music yet.

Becky looked at where Louisa pointed and saw Jessie.

But Louisa wasn't willing to give up. "Becky, can you please do me a favor? How about we split tonight's income?"

Becky laughed. "Do you think I'm short on cash?"

"It doesn't matter whether you have money or not. Life is all about taking new chances and opportunities!"

“You’re right. Maybe you should give it a short,”

Becky said. She then walked towards Jessie.

Jessie knew that Becky would come tonight, but she hadn’t expected her to show up so soon.

Jessie hadn’t slept well since she had said what she shouldn’t have said before Rory.

But what had been done could not be undone. She couldn’t withdraw her words now. She couldn’t go back in time and make sure that Rory and the others didn’t hear her.

Jessie felt guilty when she saw Becky. “You’re here,” she said.

Becky had been friends with Jessie for more than twenty years and knew her well.

She knew from Jessie’s expression that she had caused trouble. “Have you been busy of late?”

Ever since Jessie had shut down her studio, she had become a typical leisurely rich lady.

There was no way she had been busy.

But Jessie felt guilty now and was also afraid that she would say more wrong things. “No, I’m not busy. See! I came here to help Louisa today!”

Becky’s eyebrows shot up and she looked at Jessie, a faint smile playing on her lips. “Tell me. What’s wrong?”

She paused and added, “It’s okay if you don’t tell me. I’ll know about it sooner or later.”

Jessie, who was about to lie, was struck dumb.

They looked at each other for a long moment before Jessie surrendered. "I did a stupid thing two days ago, Becky."

"Okay," Becky said, nodding, indicating for Jessie to go on.

"It's related to you."

Jessie pursed her lips, tapping her right leg restlessly. She seemed ready to run as she watched Becky's expression change.

Becky chuckled. "Is it related to the news about me on the Internet two days ago?"

Jessie nodded. "Yes, a little bit."

Becky clicked her tongue and said, "Tell me. What is it? Leniency for those who confess, severity for those who resist."

Jessie didn't reply at first. But she couldn't stand Becky's gaze anymore. She had to tell Becky the truth. "Well, I was very angry when I saw what had happened on the Internet that day, so I went to seek justice on your behalf."

"Okay?"

"I went to Rory."

"Did you punch him?"

"I tried but failed."

Becky looked at her curiously. "Is that all?" she asked.

"That's all," Jessie said, nodding repeatedly.

Becky looked at her and smiled wordlessly.

Jessie's guilt didn't allow her to squash the actual incident. "Well, there was an episode, but it isn't important."

"Isn't important?"

It was a simple question but Jessie was overwhelmed by it. "It was really not important. Becky, sweetie, can you stop asking?"

If Becky continued to ask, Jessie would have no choice but to tell her the truth.

Becky smiled and looked at the stage. "I had a meal with Rory today."

Jessie was shocked.

“Rory asked me a very strange question,” Becky continued, smiling faintly at Jessie.

“What was it?”

“What do you think, Jessie?”

There was no way Jessie could lie to Becky. She broke down and answered, “I’m sorry, Becky. I didn’t mean to do that. My head was hot with anger at that point and I scolded him and accidentally told him that you’ve loved him for almost ten years. I swear, I didn’t mean to do it!”

Becky had already guessed that. Rory was not a person who’d make groundless guesses.

His sudden question today told Becky that he must know something other than the truth about the comic book.

Now Becky knew why.

Jessie knew that Becky would come tonight, but she hadn’t expected her to show up so soon.

Jessie hadn't slept well since she had said what she shouldn't have said before Rory.

But what had been done could not be undone. She couldn't withdraw her words now. She couldn't go back in time and make sure that Rory and the others didn't hear her.

Jessie felt guilty when she saw Becky. "You're here," she said.
