Becky kept her mouth shut which made Jessie flustered.

Jessie then tugged Becky's sleeve and said, "If punching me will make you feel better, then just do it!"

Becky came to her senses and eyed Jessie up and down. "Well, you better figure out which parts of your body can withstand a punch."

Becky didn't want to dwell on it any longer. Whether or not Rory knew about it was no longer her concern. From now on, she had nothing to do with him.

She hoped that they would never cross paths again.

After all, she just said that to Rory.

If she kept arguing with Jessie about this, she would end up breaking her promise.

Becky didn't want to develop that habit. She pinched Jessie's face and smiled. "Have you eaten yet?"

When Jessie saw that Becky raised her hand, she thought that Becky was about to hit her. Jessie then subconsciously covered her head with her hands.

Silly girl! Becky wasn't going to punch her.

Jessie didn't feel a punch land on her. Instead, she felt a pinch on her cheek. She then heard Becky ask her if she had eaten yet.

Jessie was stunned. So that was it?

"No, no yet."

Becky furrowed her brows. "I've brought some food with me. You can sit next to Louisa and grab some."

Jessie suddenly regretted what she did. "I'm sorry, Becky. It's all my fault."

"You can cry over it. Just don't get your snot on my clothes."

Becky's reply completely ruined the atmosphere.

Jessie stood up and said, "Well, then, I'll just go get something to eat."

Her stomach rumbled as soon as she finished speaking.

Becky was slightly amused by how Jessie handled the situation. She glanced at her and joked, "I think your belly wants to say something."

Jessie was starving, so she immediately went off and grabbed a bite to eat.

Becky walked slowly behind her. When Louisa saw that Becky was back, she continued to convince her. "Becky, are you really not going to help me?"

Jessie narrowed her eyes and asked, "What do you mean?"

"I'll be having a party tonight. I invited a lot of people to come to the show, but I haven't found someone to play the party queen yet!"

Jessie understood. "So you want Becky to be the party queen?"

Louisa glanced at Becky and nodded.

Becky grabbed a glass of juice and pretended that she didn't hear it.

Louisa knew that she couldn't convince Becky, so she turned to Jessie and whispered, "Can you convince Becky to help? I'll give you half of tonight's profits if she agrees."

Jessie's eyes lit up. "How much money are you going to make tonight?"

"About three hundred thousand dollars, and that's just the rough estimate."

"Wow!" Jessie exclaimed. "You got a deal!"

This way, she could use the money to buy a new bag. Only a fool would refuse that much money.

After she had swallowed the food in her mouth, Jessie moved to Becky's side of the table with her lunch box. "So Becky..."

But before she could even ask her, Becky rebuked, "Don't even think about it."

Becky then placed her glass down on the table. "Now that I've brought your food here, I should probably go home. I have to get to work early tomorrow for a meeting."

She stood up from her chair and was about to leave.

Louisa anxiously nudged Jessie's arm.

Jessie badly wanted to get the one hundred and fifty dollars. She had lost her appetite.

She dropped her fork and jumped out of her chair to chase Becky.

As soon as Becky walked out of the door, she bumped into an acquaintance of hers.

It was Devin.

A beautiful woman was standing beside him.

Devin had not reached out to Becky since that night. It was almost a week.

Since Becky divorced Rory, Devin had always been after her, trying all he could to make her his. However, it now seemed as though Devin had exhausted his patience that night.

Devin was a playboy and he was very particular about his girlfriend. His ex-girlfriends were always good-looking.

Becky had only known a little about Devin before now. All she knew about him was what Jessie had told her.

Now it seemed that the rumors were right.

Becky grew up surrounded by good-looking people. Her mother, Vivien, her grandmother, and her aunt were all rare beauties, so she had a high standard for beauty.

Staring at the woman standing beside Devin, Becky felt quite amazed.

She couldn't deny that the other woman was very beautiful.

Snapping out of her thought, Becky smiled at Devin and greeted him. "Hi, Devin."

“Hi.” Devin smiled back at her.

He sounded distant at this moment.

Almost everyone in the city knew that Devin had chased Becky for a few days. Now that he had a new girlfriend, Becky could understand he wanted to keep a distance from her in front of his girlfriend.

In Becky’s eyes, Devin was a considerate boyfriend and respected the feelings of his girlfriend.

Jessie, who joined Becky afterward, frowned when she saw the lady with Devin. Snorting, she said, “It’s been a while, Devin. I haven’t seen you with this lady before. Is she your new girlfriend?”

Jessie’s words were ironical. “Jessie,” Becky whispered, pinching her arm.

Reluctantly, Jessie pursed her lips and crossed her arms across her breasts.

“Nice to meet you, Becky. I have heard a lot about you.” The good-looking woman with Devin stretched her hand. “I’m Carlee Olson, but you can call me Carlee.”

For a while, Becky was stunned, gawping at the outstretched hand. Then she took Carlee’s hand and said, “Nice to meet you, Carlee.”

“Do you mind having a drink with us?” Carlee asked with a broad grin.

“I would have loved to, Carlee, but something else needs my attention now. There will be lots of time to catch up next time,” Becky replied, smiling faintly.

Devin had been quiet all through. Becky threw a glance at him and muttered, “Bye.” Then she turned to leave.

The sudden encounter with Devin and his new girlfriend made Jessie forget the reason why she wanted to catch up with Becky. When she saw that Becky left, she thought that Becky was irritated by Devin and his new girlfriend. She shot Carlee and Devin a black look and then hurried to catch up with Becky.

“Becky, are you okay?” Jessie asked, out of breath. “Who is that woman? Is Devin no longer interested in you?”

Becky stopped walking and glanced at Jessie. “Devin has stopping chasing me for a week now.”

Jessie was stunned by Becky’s words. She found it unbelievable that Devin would give up on Becky. “The jerk!”

Becky continued walking toward her car and Jessie tagged along. "You said he was not bad, didn't you?"

"But he's a playboy. Just forget about him." Jessie pouted. "Becky, you don't have any feelings for him, do you?"

Becky knew that Jessie misunderstood. "What a great imagination you have, Jessie. Don't you think you'll make a beautiful writer?"

Then she opened her car door and got in the car. "I have some important documents to work on. I would love to be alone while at them."

Jessie gaped at her. "Come on, Becky! It's not office hours. Why would you work overtime?"

Becky ignited the engine and said casually, "Making money makes me happy."

Dazed, Jessie watched Becky zoom off. Not knowing what to do, she stood there helplessly.

Jessie thought Becky would feel bad because of Devin, but Becky didn't.

She had to admit she was a little deflated. Who wouldn't be? Devin had chased her for over six months and then, out of nowhere, he had a new girlfriend.

Becky looked around a bit while she waited at the intersection. The lights turned green and she drove on.

It was true what Becky had told Jessie about having documents to read.

The development of the land in the north of the city motivated her, as it was her responsibility.

Giving Becky the project had been Elvin's way of making things difficult for her. He now knew who she was and didn't dare to go against her again.

Becky knew it must be distressing for Elvin to hand over such an important project to her and give up his control of it.

Yet there was nothing he could do.

Becky's father was the owner of Fairway Group.

The land was worth about forty billion dollars. It was extremely time-consuming to develop it in a way that would maximize its usefulness.

Becky was determined to rise to the top management ranks of Fairway Group based on her talent, and this would mean garnering a collection of solid accomplishments. This project was just the beginning.

She knew that if she did make it to the headquarters, the shareholders would say she had only gotten that far because she was the chairman's daughter.

Becky didn't care what they might say about her relying on her father, Stevie.

She could not deny that she had been born with a silver spoon in her mouth. Sometimes reincarnation was destiny.

Even so, she knew she was not lacking in ability. She had more than enough intelligence and capability, so she might as well show them.

Inheriting the family property was not going to be easy.

Reading the report had taken most of the night.

Looking at her phone after the long hours of concentrating on her work, she could see Jessie had left many messages.

The last message from Jessie was sent just five minutes ago. Reading through the messages, Becky could see that her friend had asked if she was okay every few minutes.

After sending a few messages, Jessie had stopped, thinking Becky didn't want to reply.

However, she couldn't stand it after a while and began to curse at Devin. She even said all men were jerks, including her brother and father.

"Becky, don't be upset because of men. You have so much going for you! You are wealthy and gorgeous and if you were to crook your finger at them, all men would come to you. Both Rory and Devin are over thirty. They're too old for you!"

A smile lit Becky's face as she read Jessie's messages. Reading the documents had been exhausting. Now she felt much better.

Jessie called her as soon as Becky finished reading the last message.

Becky put Jessie's call on speakerphone. Before Jessie could say anything, Becky said, "Do you think I'm going to kill myself over a man?"

Jessie was about to comfort Becky when she heard this. She breathed a sigh of relief and chuckled. "I just worry sometimes that you're going to give up on life."

"I have no intention of giving up on life. I have boatloads of money."

Jessie was a little annoyed by Becky's flippancy over money. They both had rich families, but Jessie's money was rigidly controlled by her family. "Why didn't you reply to my messages?"

"I was reading the documents for a project," Becky replied. "The development of the land is worth hundreds of millions of dollars, so I didn't even have time to look at my phone."

Jessie found her concern for Becky unnecessary. "It seems you're in a great mood."

Becky smiled, knowing Jessie had something to tell her. "What is it? Just tell me."

"There's a photograph of Devin with his new girlfriend in Beauty Villa," Jessie replied.

Since Becky just made her upset, Jessie decided to return the favor.

Becky snorted and said, "You're so interested in Devin's private life. Be honest with me, Jessie. Have you secretly fallen in love with Devin?"

"Becky, please keep this nonsense to yourself."

"Nonsense? Are you sure?"

Jessie's mouth fell agape. She had no idea what to say and was completely baffled.

Yet, when Jessie saw Becky was in the mood to joke with her, she assumed that Becky didn't have feelings for Devin.

Jessie just wanted to drop the topic at this point. "I'm sorry, Becky. It was just some drunken ramblings."

Becky smiled. "You're right. You do talk a lot of nonsense when you're drunk."

Jessie thought that she was just worried about nothing. Becky didn't seem that upset about it. She even bragged that she was going to make hundreds of billions of dollars.

Jessie felt helpless and said, "Okay, I'll be heading to the club now. You...Never mind! Go ahead and sleep early so that you can make a lot of money tomorrow!"

Maybe all Becky wanted to do was make a lot of money. She didn't want to have a relationship at all.

Jessie was still getting used to the fact that her best friend was now sober.

Jessie then hung up the phone.

At that moment, Becky also ended the call and checked her phone screen.

What Jessie said began to replay in her mind. There's a photograph of Devin with his new girlfriend in Beauty Villa."

It was said that Devin's grandmother had given Devin the house in Beauty Villa. Devin owned many houses in Bluepond. He had taken his ex-girlfriends home before, but he had never taken any of them to Beauty Villa.

According to the tabloids, Beauty Villa was the last pure place for Devin. If he ever took a girl there, then it meant the he truly loved her.

Whether or not that was true, it was none of Becky's concern.

She came to her senses and picked up her phone. She then walked out of the study.

When Aiken first saw the photo, he sent it to Rory. Devin and Becky were close before, so it was surprising that Devin suddenly had a new girlfriend.

Becky was Rory's ex-wife, and Aiken thought that Rory should know.

Aiken wanted to watch Rory and Devin fight for Becky.

As Rory was getting another cigarette from the box, his phone lit up.

Evening came and it was dark inside the car without any lights.

When the phone lit up, its bright light was almost blinding.

Rory frowned. Knowing that it was from Aiken, he didn't want to read it just yet.

Whenever he remembered what Becky said over dinner, he would feel a sharp pain in his heart.

He grabbed the lighter and lit up a new cigarette.

Once the cigarette was lit, he looked down and saw the phone light up again.

Aiken sent him another message.

He was annoyed by Aiken's constant texting.

He threw the lighter away and picked up his phone. He then smoked for a bit before he clicked on the message.

As soon as he opened the message, he saw the photo. In that photo, Devin was in the driver's seat while a woman sat in the passenger seat next to him. The woman didn't look like Becky.

"Rory, did you hear? Devin has a new girlfriend. When did he break up with Becky?"

Rory paused for a while after he read the message.

While he was lost in thought, Aiken sent him another message.

“You should go and comfort Becky. I think you can win her back.”

Of the Kesley Peht stories I have ever read, perhaps the most impressive thing is Divorce Has Never Felt This Good. The story is too good, leaving me with many doubts. Currently the manga has been translated to . Let's read now the author's Divorce Has Never Felt This Good Kesley Peht story right here

Rory's face turned grim when he saw Aiken's message, but he didn't reply. He didn't look up at the apartment building outside his car until the phone screen was turned off and the darkness in the car returned.

Although he didn't know Becky all that well, he learned one thing from the eight months that they had been divorced. She wasn't the kind of girl who was easily deceived.

He wasn't interested in remarrying her, so why would he give a damn about this?

After their divorce, Becky disappeared for more than three months. When she came back, she was now a successful businesswoman. It wasn't long before Devin courted her. At her request, he kept the relationship private, but it was clear to everyone that he was chasing her.

It lasted for at least half a year. Both the paparazzi and onlookers alike thought that Becky was Devin's true love and that she'd finally set him straight. But alas, he now had a new girlfriend. The internet was in a frenzy as they speculated what had happened to them.

As soon as Becky finished bathing, she picked up her phone and saw the news. The latest entertainment headlines showed pictures of Devin with his new girlfriend.

It wasn't only on the news. Several people were talking about it on social media apps as well.

Devin's new girlfriend and his lapse back to his playboy lifestyle garnered him so much attention from the press that he became a superstar overnight.

After all, the girlfriends he had were very pretty. It was said that his eyes only saw women who were beautiful.

The news sites were buzzing about Devin's new girlfriend. It was much more sensational because he used to change girlfriends every three months, but now, he lasted nearly eight months without one.

Becky muted the newsfeed page on her phone and had her usual breakfast before heading off to work.

The whole country knew that Devin had a new girlfriend. This was the first time he was annoyed by the paparazzi spreading fake news.

He was so angry that he called Payne.

The sun had just risen and Payne was in a good mood. When he saw that Devin was calling him, he got confused. "That's weird; I received a call from you."

"Did you tell someone to leak those pictures on the Internet?"

"I don't have the time for that nonsense."

As soon as Payne finished speaking, Devin hung up the phone.

If Payne didn't do this, then it must've been Carlee.

Devin called Carlee. "Didn't you tell me that you don't want Nolan to find out where you are?"

Carlee had just seen the trending searches that morning and was amused. "Yes. Nolan still doesn't know where I am, right?"

"Delete the news." Devin's voice was firm and serious.

Carlee could tell that he was angry. She smirked and replied, "Don't worry. I'm doing this for you. You love Becky. How come you've never told her? This is just the push that you needed! Think of this as my way of helping you. Trust me, you'll see the positive results soon!"

If Devin wasn't her husband's cousin, Carlee would have never helped him out.

Devin scrolled through all the tabloid sites on his tablet. How could this possibly help him?

"No thanks. If you want to help me, you can stop the gossip by deleting the news."

After a while, he added, "Please."

If she didn't delete that news, people would soon discover his past.

Carlee wanted to say something else but thought better of it when Devin pleaded with her. "Okay," she said. "I'll ask someone to delete it now."

How did a smart man like Devin act so foolishly after he met Becky?

Carlee wanted to record the call and play it later for Becky.

It was unbelievable to Carlee that Devin, a man who was usually dignified and unresponsive to others, could now call and beg her for anything. After the call ended, Carlee talked to her secretary and asked the woman to delete the news.

The popular Twitter news search about Devin's girlfriend had only been active for two and a half hours before being deleted inexplicably.

Many people did not get to see the face of Devin's new girlfriend. It was widely believed that the pursuit of Becky had just been a meaningless display for Devin, and his true love was this new girlfriend. It certainly seemed so with how much he had done to protect her.

Carlee couldn't help but feel some guilt over Devin when she read the comments online. Even though she and Nolan were not on speaking terms, she still called him for help right away.

It also angered Jessie to see the search online. She had wanted to send the screenshots to Becky, but she knew it would only make her friend upset.

Louisa encouraged Jessie not to get too involved. "Even if Devin is a jerk, we don't have a reason to blame him for what he did. Becky doesn't either."

Jessie was about ready to start cursing at Devin, but what Louisa told her made her pause. "I guess you're right," she said instead.

Becky had never accepted Devin anyway. He had only pursued her. The best thing Becky could do was to pretend like it didn't bother her.

If Becky tried to cause any trouble, people would only say she was a bitch who neither accepted Devin nor allowed him to chase another woman.

Becky put it out of her mind instead and ignored the fact that the popular search mentioned her name. She didn't care.

Stevie, Becky's father, was not so nonchalant about the whole thing. His daughter's feelings had been severely disturbed by Rory before, and now this new scumbag, Devin, hurt her too.

It made Stevie extremely angry to think that Devin had been chasing his daughter and now he suddenly had a new girlfriend. He called Devin's father in a fit of rage.

The Stanley family was also big, just like the Ramos family, so their paths had crossed in the business world in the past. Even though Devin's father, Webster Stanley, had not been in business for years, he and Stevie remained friends.

Webster knew how deeply Stevie loved his daughter. The man had been traveling abroad with his wife when Stevie told him on the phone what Devin did to Becky. Webster exploded in anger. "That jerk! Don't worry, Stevie. I'm going to return home right now and make him apologize on his knees to Becky!"

Webster's response made Stevie feel a little better. For three whole years, the Casper family had done nothing but bully Becky. On the other hand, Webster didn't defend his son.

As Stevie began to calm down, his attitude softened a bit. He was better able to explain the situation. "They should be free to love who they want. As parents, we should stay out of it, but it looks shameful that Devin chased after Becky just days ago and then suddenly has a new girlfriend. People who know what happened may not make a big deal out of it, but strangers will ridicule them. It is all over the Internet about the humiliation Becky is suffering at the hands of Devin. I am not unreasonable, Webster, but Becky is my only daughter. Devin wronged her this time. Don't you think so?"

Webster's attitude remained angry. "Don't say that. It is Devin's fault, and I will make sure we clear all of this up to your satisfaction. Don't worry about it, Stevie. I'm going to hang up right now and call Devin. I'm going to demand that he apologize to Becky!"

Webster was a decisive man.

The phone suddenly went dead as he hung up.

Webster hung up the phone and planned to call Devin at once. His wife's voice stopped him. "It's so early in the morning. Who made you this angry?"

His wife's questions only added fuel to the fire of Webster's anger. "Who else would make me this angry? Devin, that's who! He told me he wanted to marry Becky just a short while ago. Now he has a new girlfriend! I can't believe he did this after chasing Becky for so long! Becky's father just called. I feel so ashamed!"

Joanne Stanley, Webster's wife, was stunned. "What new girlfriend? Do you mean Carlee?"

Webster froze with confusion. "Carlee? What does Carlee have to do with any of this?"

Joanne handed her phone to her husband. "Look for yourself! I was just about to show you. These reporters always get everything wrong. Carlee cannot be Devin's new girlfriend. They got it all wrong!"

Webster looked at the phone and read the news articles. He was even more confused. "How can Carlee be his new girlfriend?"

It was then Webster realized there had actually been a misunderstanding.

Stevie was still home to receive Webster's urgent call. Luckily, he had not left for work yet. He looked at the caller ID and was shocked. "I didn't expect Webster would call me back so soon," he said to his wife, Vivien, who was beside him.

He was encouraged that the man had taken him so seriously when he said he wanted Devin to apologize.

"Answer the phone," Vivien said. She was also stunned that Webster would ring back so soon.

Stevie answered the phone, anxious to hear how Webster and Devin planned to deal with the situation. "Webster?"

"I just found out something you might want to know, Stevie," Webster started. "The entire thing about Devin's new girlfriend is just a misunderstanding."

Stevie frowned in frustration, but he kept his composure towards Webster. He wanted the Ramos family and the Stanley family to remain on good terms. "What kind of misunderstanding? What has happened?"

Stevie's anger was bristling just under the surface as he spoke.

Webster's voice gave away his smile. "This girlfriend of Devin's in the news is Carlee. She's Nolan's wife. Don't you remember being invited to their wedding? If you look at the photo, it's really just Carlee. There have always been rumors about Devin having many girlfriends, but just like this time, none of them are true. You don't have to take any of the rumors seriously. He told us he only loves Becky."

Webster was patiently trying to convince his friend about Devin's love for Becky.

Stevie was a little muddled, but he didn't like to hear about Devin's love for Becky. He only agreed with his friend to keep the peace. "It's okay then if it's just a misunderstanding. My anger made me impulsive. Sorry to bother you so early in the morning."

"I'm glad this is resolved. I wouldn't want anything to get in between our long friendship. Becky has grown up right before my eyes and Devin cares so much for her. Maybe they'll get married one day."

Stevie simply changed the subject. He complained about the blunders of the news reporters and then made his excuses so he could end the call.

Vivien was eager to hear what was said. "What happened?"

Stevie was quiet at first. He looked on his phone at the screenshot of Devin and Carlee. The thoughts he had about the two of them made him blush.

This was even more humiliating!

He decided to tell Vivien only the basics. "Nothing. It's all just a misunderstanding. It's a married woman who is not involved with Devin. Let's not say anything to Becky. She will probably take it the wrong way."

Stevie would never want Devin as his son-in-law.

There was no way he was going to let that playboy, Devin, marry his daughter.

Despite her husband's caution, Vivien knew about all of it and laughed when she told Becky.

Becky listened and was also shocked by what Vivien told her. "That's a huge misunderstanding," she said with a smile.

The situation between Becky and Devin might have been forgotten by most people, but Rory was not one of them.

This day, Becky had a dinner party. She ran into Rory and his assistant a few moments after she had left the private room.

They were suddenly facing each other. Becky was sure Rory had gotten the hint that she did not want to greet him in any way.

Talia felt much the same as Becky.

It was a very wide corridor at the hotel, so it would be no problem for the four people to pass by each other.

Even with the wide corridor, Becky took extra precautions and subconsciously walked in her high heels to the far side. She did not want to bump into Rory. The hallway was much too large for that to happen, as it was about six meters wide.

Becky held out hope that they could have an encounter much like two strangers. She wondered how she would manage it but then decided to stop worrying about it and continued to walk by Rory.

Unfortunately, Rory suddenly spoke to her, just as Becky feared. She did not have any desire to acknowledge his words.

She did not stop or look back.

She thought she handled the situation well. The night would have gone off without a hitch if Rory had not walked back in her direction to catch up with her.

Becky felt frustration come over her as Rory ruined her night.

"Sir, do we know each other?"

Becky uttered the words as she spun around and looked at Rory frigidly. She glared at him as if she had never seen him before in her life.

Rory's heart felt like it was being stabbed. He took a deep breath to calm himself, then said, "I've told you about Devin. He does not have good intentions with you."

Becky graced him with a sarcastic smile. "Sir, you are not in any position to tell me anything."

Rory ignored her frostiness. "I will help you if you need me to."

He said this in a kind tone, looking at her intently.

Becky could do little but sneer. "No, thank you. I think you need more help than I do."

Her hand came up as she pointed a finger at her head. "There's something really wrong with you."

Not waiting for a reply, Becky turned around and began to walk away.

Rory knew Becky was angry with him by her strong reaction. He continued to look at her as she walked away, barely holding in his anger. Before she was gone completely, he couldn't help but give the last warning. "Devin is heartless, Becky."

Becky did not have any outward reaction to his words. She kept walking and quickly vanished around the corner of the corridor.

Rory looked at Lowell.

There was nothing Lowell dared to say. If he could have hidden behind the wall, he would have.

Rory's mood had been terrible lately. He had wanted to skip the dinner party altogether but decided to go at the last moment. It was an accident that he met Becky in the corridor.

"I'm not going into the dinner party. Go without me."

Rory left and began walking the same way Becky had gone.

Becky made it into the elevator and watched the doors close in front of her. She thought about Rory's hypocritical statement.

It was ironic to hear Rory say that Devin was heartless. He was no better.

The elevator quickly reached the first floor. The doors slid open.

Devin stood there in front of her. It was amazing that in one day, she ran into both Rory and Devin.

“What a coincidence to see you here, Becky.” Devin addressed her before she could react.

Becky smiled and replied. “Indeed, it is.”

She nodded politely and stepped out of the elevator.

There was no reason for her to say anything to Rory. With Devin, however, a brief greeting should be enough.

“Becky,” Devin said as she moved past him.

Becky stopped and couldn’t believe how the day had unraveled. Both Rory and Devin wanted to talk to her.

Becky didn’t want to ignore Devin’s words the way she had with Rory. They were still friends, after all.

Becky turned around and looked at Devin.

She smiled faintly. “Is there anything else?”

Devin looked at Becky, smiling.

He paused for a few seconds before saying, “I don’t have a new girlfriend.”

And he didn’t have ex-girlfriends, either.

“You’re not supposed to be telling me this,” Becky said, meeting his gaze.

They looked at each other in silence, neither wanting to be the first to surrender.

Finally, Becky gave up and said, "I need to leave."

"Okay," Devin said. He stood there, looking at Becky the same way as before.

Becky didn't know what to say and instead, looked at Talia, who thought that Becky was trying to tell her something. "Miss Ramos?" she said quizzically.

Becky was embarrassed. She shook her head and said, "Nothing." Then, she continued on her way out.

Before Talia followed Becky out, she looked at Devin, only to find that he was still looking at Becky. She looked at Becky, who managed to cover quite some distance, and hurried to catch up with her.

Devin stood still, watching Becky's retreating back until she disappeared out of sight. He then turned to look at the man not far away. "Do you love peeping?"

Rory's face darkened at these words and he walked up to Devin. "What are you up to, Devin?"

Devin looked at Rory with a sneer as he said, "Did I do anything?"

Rory didn't want to waste his time talking nonsense with Devin. "You are free to do whatever you want except for hurting Becky! You are naive if you think taking revenge on me by playing with Becky's feelings is a good idea."

Devin clicked his tongue. He smiled, but his eyes were cold. "You're going to be thirty this year, aren't you, Rory?" he asked, amused.

"So what?"

Rory and Devin were of the same age. If Devin wanted to point out that Rory was old, he needed to take a look at himself.

"You're thirty years old. Why are you still so childish? Do you think I'm still playing the same trick with you? The fact that I'm pursuing Becky has nothing to do with you," Devin said, enunciating each word.

But Rory didn't believe it. They had been opponents for many years and he knew well the kind of man Devin was. "I won't buy it. If you do something bad to Becky, I won't let you go."

Devin's amusement increased at this. "If my memory serves me right, it has been eight months since you and Becky divorced, hasn't it?"

Devin's words were like a knife stabbing at Rory's heart.

But what he said next made Rory even more desperate. “As an ex-husband, you are in no position to poke your nose into what happens between Becky and me. And this is the last time that I’ll tell you this, Rory, that I’m serious about Becky. I want to marry her and be with her until death does us apart.”

The expression on Rory’s face shifted slightly, but he soon came to his senses. He suppressed his emotions and sneered, “The story of a playboy turning his life around only exists in novels. You’d better behave yourself!”

Then, Rory turned around, intending to walk out of the hotel.

But he had barely taken a few steps when Devin’s voice sounded from behind him.

“Rory, I have loved Becky for many years.”
