

Chapter 85 Blind

Before Denise could protest any further, Rory's cold gaze shut her up. She reluctantly approached Stevie, dissatisfaction written all over her face.

Becky looked at her father.

Stevie raised his hand and stopped Denise. "You don't have to say sorry here. In fact, I doubt you even believe that you did something wrong. If it weren't for the fact that Becky was married to Rory for three years, we wouldn't have come here in person to ask for an explanation."

Rory frowned slightly. "Mr. Ramos, what do you mean?"

"I want Denise to publicly apologize and admit that she was the one who spread malicious rumors about Becky. If she isn't willing to apologize, then we'll settle this matter in court."

Stevie had dealt in business for decades and he was by no means a simple-minded man. Asking them to say sorry and pay some money in private had no effect on the Casper family whatsoever.

But it would be different if Denise had to apologize in public. She used to gang up with Babette to hurt Becky.

Now, she had to pay the price.

Stevie had already discussed this with his wife before they came here, and they wanted Denise to apologize in public.

"By the way, you don't have to compensate us. Yes, the reputation of the Ramos family has been damaged badly, thanks to Denise. But I was worried that you would think we are demanding an exorbitant price," Stevie added meaningfully.

Upon hearing what Stevie said, the Casper family all looked sullen.

After being confronted by Becky just now, Elmore had fallen silent and didn't know what to say.

They used to push Becky around, but now Elmore knew Becky wasn't afraid of them.

Jenifer had always been a peacemaker. In her eyes, Becky's parents were making a reasonable request, so she didn't try to protest.

All the color drained from Denise's face after hearing what Stevie said. "Rory, I didn't..."

Rory looked at her with a long face. The ruthlessness in his eyes made Denise stop cold.

"Okay. We'll apologize publicly," Rory said, looking at Becky.

Becky returned his gaze, but there was no expression on her face.

"Also, Denise drugged my daughter," Stevie added coldly.

"Becky also drugged my sister," Rory responded with a frown.

Stevie pursed his lips unhappily. "Your sister drugged my daughter first. Isn't it only right that my daughter got even?"

"You misunderstood me. What I meant to say is that I think we're even on this matter."

Rory firmly looked straight at Stevie, thinking that if the latter pursued this matter, both sides would suffer losses.

"He is right. We're even on this matter. That's all for today. After Denise makes her public apology, we'll have nothing to do with each other, but..." Becky's voice trailed off and she glanced at Denise.

After a slight pause, Becky continued, "If you dare to provoke me again, it will not be as easy to settle."

Then she turned to Stevie and Vivien. "Dad, Mom, let's go."

Before leaving, Stevie couldn't help but say, "Back then, in order to marry Rory, Becky cut ties with us. Fortunately, she was able to realize later that she made a huge mistake. You're too blind to realize how good she is. As for you, Rory, remember that you and Becky are divorced. Leave my daughter alone!"

Becky and Vivien were already halfway to the car when Stevie said this. Hearing him, Becky's eyes turned red.

It wasn't just the Casper family that were blind. Becky was blind, too. She was blinded by her love for Rory.

Fortunately, she could see things straight now. ③
