

Chapter 90 Devin Loves You

After apologizing on Line Moments, Denise made the same apology on other social media apps. She also apologized on Twitter, while tagging the Fairway Group's official Twitter account.

In the snap of a finger, almost everyone knew that Becky's father was the richest man in Bluepond.

Elvin couldn't sleep the whole night once he came to know that Becky was the daughter of the Fairway Group's CEO.

The next day happened to be a weekend. Becky and Jessie dropped Stevie and Vivien off at the airport together.

On the way back, Becky received a call from Elvin.

But Becky declined the call as soon as she saw who was calling.

Jessie, who was sitting beside her, thought that the call was from Rory. "Let me guess. Now that Rory knows that you are the daughter of the richest man around, they want you back. Am I right?"

Becky stopped the car at a red light and turned to look at Jessie, her expression stoic. "That was Elvin."

"Oh, that old man!" Jessie snorted. "He caused so many troubles for you and now that he knows your real identity, he probably couldn't fall asleep last night."

"I don't care. I've got nothing to do with him," Becky said with a shrug.

Jessie nodded and then changed the subject. "Louisa said she wants to treat us to lunch today."

"Great," Becky said, smiling.

It was rare for Louisa to be so generous. The last time Jessie and Becky had tried to help Louisa get customers, all they had gotten in return was a membership card each.

It was already eleven o'clock when they arrived at the location that Louisa had sent them. As soon as Becky got out of the car, she saw Rory and his friends.

Jessie, who had just finished sending a text, followed Becky's gaze. She immediately looked back at Becky and asked, "Do you want to say hi?"

Becky spared Jessie a dry glance and said, "I don't think so."

Then, she turned around and walked into the restaurant. Aiken had seen Jessie and Becky too. He was about to make his way over to them to greet Becky, but her reaction stunned him. "Come on! We don't eat people!"

he called.

He couldn't believe she left without saying hello.

The expression on Rory's face darkened at his words.

Aiken saw this and added deliberately, "No contact after divorce. Becky keeps her word."

Rory's eyes narrowed as he watched the figure disappear in the distance. "Just shut up, will you?"

"Don't be so angry, man. You are the one who wanted to divorce her."

"Aiken."

Aiken stopped at the look on Rory's face. He felt a chill down his spine as he watched Rory's eyes glitter menacingly. "Relax. I'm just talking to myself," he said hurriedly.

Louisa had been generous in inviting Becky to lunch, but she obviously had a purpose. Her bar was doing well now, and she also earned well. She had become a success and wanted to open a new branch.

Louisa had already found the perfect place, which was located in a very good location right smack in the middle of an entertainment hub. She had bought a barbecue restaurant, but the place was a little small, so she ended up buying the store downstairs too. She now wanted to connect the two places as one.

But the problem was that the owner of the building didn't allow her to do so.

Hearing this, Becky finally understood what she wanted.

"So you want me to talk to Devin?"

Louisa was pouring coffee for Becky and she replied with a smile, "That building belongs to the Stanley Group. Devin can do something about it."

Becky looked at the cup of coffee in front of her and couldn't help but laugh as she asked, "Why do you think Devin will do me a favor?"

"He will. We all know that he loves you," Louisa said with a smile.

Becky's face turned red. "That's not true."

Louisa also knew that such a simple meal would not be enough for Becky to agree to help her. She pulled out the contract she had prepared and continued, "I will give you five percent of the shares."

Becky glanced at her and smiled. "Since it's a cooperation, I'll give you one million. And I want ten percent shares."

Louisa thought for a while and said, "Deal!"

After a short pause, she added, "I heard that Devin is planning to eat here today. How about we go to the entrance and wait for him?"

Becky was surprised.