Chapter 751 Being With Me

"Did mommy call you here?" Ben asked.

Charlie nodded. "Yes! When I received the message she sent me, I rushed over right away. Look how early it is! I'm sleepy."

While speaking, he let go of his son. "You can sleep a little longer, and I'm gonna be here for you."

At this moment, he felt guilty about the precious moments he had missed with them. When he met them, they were a few years old and could express themselves clearly. Before their encounter, Theresa had to raise the two kids alone while being bossed around by the Watson family. She must have experienced a lot of suffering. No wonder Ben put on a brave face and swore to shield her from any harm when he grew up.

Lying beside Charlie, he creased his face into a smile as he looked at his father. He loved Charlie. Charlie's appearance always brightened up his day. Recently, he had been on the edge of his seat at the thought of Charlie leaving him. What if he could never see Charlie again? What if Charlie became the father of other children?

Although he didn't find himself detesting Roderick or Dick, it never entered his mind that they'd replace. become his father.

Chapter 752 Her One And Only

Despite her complex family condition and the divorce of her parents, Cristina always yearned for true love. Eugene was her first man, the only one she had even devoted to. She gave him her first date, first kiss...

A few years after he left, she never got together with another man. Her aunt had fixed her up with her friends or colleagues several times. But then, Cristina either went on fake trips or refused them after the meeting. She even felt that she had lost interest in men.

Until he came back, she realized that what she resisted was just other men, not him! As soon as they met again her dormant love for him was rekindled.

His kisses were already familiar to her. When she was with him the other day, she was still torn between getting back with him and breaking up. She mustn't let him hold her in thrall easily. Yet now, she wasn't hesitate any longer.

When he parted her lips, she took the initiative to wrap her arms around him. As the long kiss ended, Cristina gazed at him and asked, "The injury on your head..."

"How is she doing? I'm worried about her." Concern was written all over Brenda's face.

Cristina was her niece. After taking care of Cristina for all these years, she had already treated Cristina as if she was her own daughter.

Theresa whispered, "Eugene should still be inside the room with her."

Frozen for a moment, Brenda soon came back to her sense and discard all thoughts of checking on Cristina in person. She coughed. "She's very much her own man."

Inside the room, Cristina heard all their conversation. She was rendered speechless. Eugene and she merely lay in the bed together last night. They didn't do anything else. Why did Brenda speak as if they had had sex...

Casting a glance at the man beside her, Cristina uttered with exasperation, "Forget it. Let's get up for breakfast!"

She didn't want them to further misunderstand it.

Once she entered, she saw Charlie dozing with Ben, both fast asleep. The bed was clearly too small for Charlie. It seemed rather cramped after he squeezed himself onto it. Yet their serene sleeping faces melted

Ben sat on the bed and looked at Charlie. "Dad."

Charlie looked at him and asked, "What's wrong?"

"Do you like Leonard?" Ben asked curiously.

Hearing Ben's question, Charlie replied, "Of course I like him. You and he are both my children. How would I not like him?"

However, Charlie always believed that Leonard deserved a lesson. Charlie would teach that brat a lesson when Theresa's anger ceased.

"Can you be nicer to Leonard then?" Ben pleaded.

Hearing Ben's words, Charlie looked at his silly son and rubbed his head. "Son, you are so young. Why do you think so much every day?"

Leonard hated Ben, but Ben was still afraid that Charlie would dislike Leonard.

Ben was really worried about them.

Theresa took Leonard downstairs and helped Brenda prepare breakfast. The others also came downstairs.

Charlie sat down next to Leonard and took a look at the boy who was eating. In fact, Leonard was like Charlie in character. Both of them were aloof and cold.

"I don't trust him now," remarked Theresa. "I used to think he was reliable, but last time when I met his mother, I found him really good to her."

Charlie comforted, "Don't worry. Eugene is not a mama's boy."

"I hope so," said Theresa. She glanced at Charlie and asked, "When will you leave?"

Now that Charlie had had dinner with Ben, he had achieved his goal.

Charlie took a look at his watch and said, "I'm leaving now."

As he was speaking, Jonathan came.

Jonathan was here to pick up Charlie and stood at the door without getting into the living room when he saw Charlie sitting next to Theresa.

Theresa said, "Go ahead."

Rose didn't expect that Jimmy would kneel to beg for her forgiveness.

She took a look at the crowd and pulled him to his feet. "What are you doing? Many people are watching us."

She couldn't believe that he knelt down in front of so many people.

Jimmy held her hand and said, "If you don't forgive me, I won't get up."

"You..." Rose stammered, "You value your dignity a lot, don't you?"

He was angry with her and said something outrageous just because he cared about his dignity.

Rose didn't expect that he would kneel to apologize at the moment.

Jimmy said, "I do care about my dignity, but I care more about my wife. Rose, did you fall in love with someone else? Are you going to abandon me?"

"Of course not." Rose's tone softened. "Don't slander me. Get up!"

"So you have forgiven me?" Jimmy looked at her expectantly.

“This is my husband,” Rose replied. “Didn’t you want to see him before? His name is Jimmy. I brought him to visit you today.”

“Good to see you, Grandma,” Jimmy greeted Ella politely.

Ella said, “Good to see you! Please have a seat.”

Jimmy was good-looking and tall. In terms of appearance, he was really good enough for Rose.

Ella made no remarks.

Jimmy sat down.

Rose asked Ella, “Are you not going to eat anything?”

Rose said, "Jimmy used to work in our company, but later my father kicked him out. Grandma, could you please talk to my father and ask him to let me Jim go back to the company? What do you think?"

On the way back, Rose had asked Jimmy about his work. Jimmy told her about Dick's attitude. After thinking for a while, Rose thought it was better to help Jimmy go back to her family's company.

"I haven't seen your father for a long time," Ella asked. "How is he?"

"He's fine," said Rose. "If you say something, he will definitely listen to you."

Seeing the worried look on Rose's face, Ella smiled and rubbed her head. "You really look exactly like your mother. Haven't you told your father about it?"

"Yes, I talked to him, but he rejected me," Rose sighed in depression.

Thinking that her father was nice to Charlie and believed whatever Charlie said, Rose felt resigned.

If Jimmy hadn't left the company, they wouldn't have quarreled and misunderstood each other.

Now that Theresa was going to be with Charlie, Rose wondered why she couldn't live an easy life with Jimmy.

Seeing her depression, Ella said, "All right. I'll talk to your father."

Ella seldom talked to Pat. Since her daughter passed away, Ella had not been so close to her son-in-law as before.

"What did she say?" Charlie couldn't help but feel that Rose's grandmother began to sound unfamiliar.

Pat said, "Rose went to visit her and asked me to let Jimmy come back to my company. I think I should let you know."

He meant to inform Charlie instead of discussing it.

Charlie frowned and asked, "Can't we negotiate?"

Pat said, "You know I don't like Jimmy either, but since my wife left, my mother-in-law has never asked me to do anything. It was the first time she called to ask me for help. I have to do Rose a favor for my mother-in-law's sake. Please let Jimmy go for my sake. Anyway, you have divorced Theresa."

When Charlie heard the name Jimmy, he would think of Theresa.

It was not until he knew that Leonard and Ben were Theresa's children that he realized how shameless

Jimmy was and how much harm Jimmy had caused to Theresa.

Charlie sneered. "What a bastard!"

After saying that, Charlie stood up and left.

Chandler looked at Dick and advised, "Please come! If you don't, you wouldn't know when you can see your father next time."

Dick pursed his lips and looked more serious.

Knowing that Dick would agree, Chandler stood up and patted him on the shoulder. "Listen to me."

Chandler treated Dick as his brother.

Because both Dick and Chandler were living in Serameton, Dick's father was close to Chandler.

Chandler also took good care of Dick.

Dick used to be very thin and bullied by others when he was at school.

He was not a person who would not admit defeat and liked to fight with others.

In fact, Dick had hated Charlie since they were at school. The two of them were about the same age and studied in the same school. Chandler had always asked Charlie to help Dick.

Hence, every time Dick lost the fight with Charlie, Charlie would look at him with disdain and say,
