

Chapter 0039

"Elena, you're way too kind! How can you let her walk all over you like that?"

Elena and Janice swapped glances upon hearing Eason's outburst.

Janice continued, "Oh, Dr. Harris! Maisie is extremely manipulative and scheming! She has no right to work in this hospital!"

Eason replied seriously, "You're right. I'll find a chance to report her behavior to Dr. Lutz. A scumbag like her should be fired!"

Elena chuckled coldly on the inside. She knew that Eason was still useful to her, hence her decision to leave him hanging.

Once Keith heard about Maisie's behavior, he'd definitely throw Maisie out of the hospital. Elena would take pleasure in savoring every moment by then.

The thought of Maisie getting fired cheered Elena up, to say the least.

Meanwhile, Maisie arrived outside the chairman's office. She knocked on the door gently.

"You wish to see me, Dr. Lutz?"

Keith took off his reading glasses before flashing a grandfatherly smile at Maisie. "It's you, Mais. Take a seat, please."

Maisie sank down on an armchair. Keith busied himself in preparing black tea, though the joy on his face was palpable.

"Come take a sip of fresh tea brewed from my latest collection. You should count your lucky stars that you're special to me. I will never brew this wonderful tea for anyone else who visits my office, you know."

After Maisie accepted her teacup, she took a small sip from it. Then, she started showering Keith with praises just to show how much she respected him.

"The aroma is on point. It did taste slightly bitter when I first drank it, but the aftertaste was rather sweet. This cup of tea truly is amazing."

Keith raised an eyebrow smugly in response. He asked smilingly, "What about the tea your mentor usually brews, then?"

A hint of a helpless smile was present in Maisie's eyes. "Dr. Lutz, why do you insist on competing with my mentor? If he were to hear your question, he'd do everything in his power just to compete with you again."

"I'll have you know that I'm not worried about that possibility. He's not here, after all."

Maisie changed the topic. "But then again, you didn't call me here just for a tea party, did you?"

"You're bright, I'll give you that. Someone visited our hospital today. He's a genius who's been conducting intensive research on neurology. You know this person well. Do you want to meet him later?"

"Oh? I know that person?" Maisie's interest was piqued thanks to that statement.

At that moment, someone rapped on the door twice.

Maisie's focus was directed to the door due to the sounds. Since the door wasn't closed, she could see a tall and slender figure standing at the doorway.

"He's here," Keith remarked with a smile. "Speak of the devil, eh? Come sit with us, Alexander."

Alexander Miller was dressed in a light-colored suit. He looked quite charming and gentlemanly.

The moment their eyes met, Maisie's eyelashes fluttered slightly out of surprise.

Meanwhile, Alexander watched as shock filled Maisie's beautiful amber eyes. He then smiled at her before speaking up in a calm and soothing voice.

"It's been a while since we last met, Maisie."

Maisie stared at him in delight. "Alexander? When did you return to the country?"

"Two days ago. I just got back."

"Haha! I told you you'd know him, didn't I?" Keith chuckled heartily.

Maisie was still surprised by Alexander's appearance. It appeared that Keith was talking about Alexander all along when he brought up the mysterious neurologist.

Alexander was an extremely gifted doctor in the medical field, but he tended to work abroad. That was why Maisie found it difficult to wrap her head around his abrupt return.

"Both of you have always been famous in the medical field. Alexander's known as the pride of the medical field, whereas you're the miraculous doctor!"

"This is such wonderful news! Our hospital will continue to thrive and prosper with both of you on the team!"

Keith laughed heartily while he spoke. He'd love nothing more than to pop a bottle of champagne just to celebrate the occasion with Alexander and Maisie.

"I didn't expect you to return, Alexander," Maisie stated smilingly.

Adoration could be seen in Alexander's eyes as he noted the way Maisie's eyes sparkled. "I'll be working with you from now on, Maisie. I look forward to our days together."

Maisie continued to smile. "My thoughts exactly."

Once she headed back to the meeting room, she noticed that Sadie had reserved a seat for her.

"Over here, Dr. Bardot!"

Maisie walked over to the seat next to Sadie and sat down.

Elena shot Maisie a sideways glance before flashing a smile at her.

"I heard that Dr. Lutz wanted to see you in his office, Dr. Bardot. Did something happen?"

Maisie cast her gaze down at the meeting records before she started flipping through them, looking composed as ever. Her lips were pursed, though her voice sounded clipped.

"It was nothing."

Elena's smile was still bright and cheery. She probed in a gentle tone, "It seems that you're pretty close to Dr. Lutz. The rest of us have been working in the hospital for so long, yet we rarely go to his office."
