

Chapter 0040

Maisie responded casually and flipped over the document in front of her. She seemed to be unconcerned about what Elena said.

Maisie had no intention of paying Elena any attention, and Elena was offended.

"Elena, how can we compare to Dr. Bardot? She must have a lot of connections to work in this hospital. It's normal for Dr. Bardot to be familiar with Dr. Lutz, right?" Janice and Elena echoed one another as they talked about Maisie.

Sneering, Maisie stopped flipping the document and raised her head slowly. She rested her elbows against the table, interlocked her fingers, and rested her chin on them.

"Dr. Snow, do you mean to say that I bribed Dr. Lutz?"

Maisie paused before continuing, "Everyone heard that right? Please inform Dr. Lutz about this."

"You!" Janice stood up furiously. She couldn't control her expression and was unable to conceal her panic. "When did I say Dr. Lutz accepted a bribe? Maisie, you're slandering me!"

"We all heard it." Sadie raised her hand as a witness.

"You're both in cahoots with each other!"

"Huh?" Maisie was still smiling. She said calmly, "Then you can go and ask the others or check the surveillance cameras."

Janice hadn't even finished her sentence. Frowning, Elena tugged on Janice. She said while smiling, "Don't worry, everyone. I apologize to Dr. Bardot on behalf of Dr. Snow."

"But Dr. Bardot got to enter this hospital even though she's only a high school graduate, which is strange. Dr. Snow didn't mean anything else. Sorry, Dr. Bardot. Dr. Snow isn't suspecting Dr. Lutz."

What Elena meant was Janice's target of suspicion wasn't Dr. Lutz but Maisie herself.

Look, this was how someone with a slick tongue spoke. With just a few sentences, she cleared things up for the people she could not afford to offend and bit back at Maisie at the same time.

She put on a weak and innocent face to apologize on behalf of another.

Elena was awesome in putting on an act in front of people.

"That's right. Maisie is immoral. She's been seducing men since she was young, yet she tries to pretend to be noble ..."

At this moment, Dr. Lutz and Alexander frowned as they heard the conversations between a few people at the entrance of the conference room.

Someone yelled, "Stop talking. Dr. Lutz is here."

Janice glared fiercely at Masie and threatened in a low voice, "Masie, we're not done yet."

Dr. Lutz put down the documents in his hand heavily. Displeased, he glanced in Elena's direction.

He remained silent for a brief moment. The people in the conference room looked at each other. The eerie silence in the air was alarming.

Then, Dr. Lutz put on his glasses. Lowering his gaze, he flipped through the documents in front of him as his expression remained solemn.

"Some of the doctors disparage their colleagues when they're on duty. Don't they have anything better to do?" asked Dr. Lutz in a deep voice.

"Did you hear that, Maisie? Dr. Lutz was looking at you just now. He's talking about you." Janice was arrogant. She was exactly the type of person who would not admit to something unless others pointed her out.

Maisie did not bother to look at her.

Dr. Lutz reprimanded them for a while, but Alexander had caught a lot of people's attention.

He was good-looking with a gentle temperament, which attracted the attention of many young female doctors.

"Dr. Lutz, who's this?"

"I almost forgot to introduce him." Dr. Lutz returned to the topic seriously. "He's Alexander Miller. Dr ..."

Before Dr. Lutz could finish his words, the conference room became noisy.

Someone exclaimed, "You're the neurologist with a perfect surgery record, Dr. Miller, right?"

Smiling, Alexander nodded slightly. He replied in a gentle voice, "Yes, I am."

"Oh my god!" It was another burst of exclamation. "You're truly my idol. It was my dream to learn from you."

"Me too!" A few doctors stood up excitedly.

A few directors from the neurology department asked Alexander some questions on the spot. Alexander's tone remained calm as he answered those few tricky questions with ease.

The directors could not help but applaud. "You're the pride of the medical field. I've already learned a lot from you."

"That's right. I've been bothered by these few issues for quite some time. I didn't expect to get the answers I needed from you. I should hurry back and continue my research based on this."

Alexander modestly nodded and smiled faintly. "You're all too kind."

"Elena, this new doctor is so handsome!" Janice looked at Alexander's face and couldn't control her excitement. The next moment, she saw Alexander's gaze fixed on them.

Janice's heart was pounding. The man was already walking toward her.

Janice tugged at Elena's clothes excitedly. "Elena, look! Dr. Miller has been staring at you since just now. He's approaching you. Do you know him?"

Elena blinked, then sat up straight nervously upon noticing the man walking over to her calmly. Pursing her lips, she shook her head. "This is the first time I'm seeing him."

"Elena, did Dr. Miller fall in love with you at first sight? He must be coming over to ask for your contact number."

Elena blushed when she heard what Janice said. Even though her heart was fluttering, she quickly returned to a reserved expression. It would be worth bragging about if Alexander fell in love with her at first sight. Pretending to be shy, she said to Janice, "Stop talking nonsense."

"I'm not. Elena, you're stunning, and your medical skills are excellent. What kind of man wouldn't fall in love with you at first sight?" Janice flattered Elena as she always did.

Even though Elena knew that Janice was kissing her ass, she was still happy about it.
