

Eight Uncles 107

Chapter 107 Anthony Had a Headache

They were home.

Lilly looked around. Although she felt a little quiet, she somehow had an inexplicable resonance.

The Crawford family was her home, and the MacNeil villa was the same. But she had another feeling here because she had seen it in the dream. It was just that the scene in the dream was vague. Now that she looked at the MacNeil villa again, she felt a sense of intimacy.

Blake took Lilly straight to the graveyard and stopped at the entrance.

“Your grandpa, grandma, and great-grandpa are here.” Blake asked softly, “Lilly, do you want to give them flowers and salute?”

Blake looked at Lilly. Seeing her look at the graveyard, he felt his heart tighten inexplicably. What if she doesn't want to?

Unexpectedly, Lilly responded, “Okay!”

Grandpa Hugh said Daddy and Great-Grandpa are great patron saints and deserve everyone's respect. So I should also respect them. Although I don't know them now, it doesn't matter. I'll know them in the future.

Lilly said firmly, “Give flowers to Great-Grandpa, Grandpa, and Grandma.”

Blake's throat was slightly astringent, and his voice was hoarse. “Okay, good girl.”

He walked into the graveyard steadily, then suddenly thought of something. He said, “Lilly, you haven't called me Daddy yet.”

This cutie was first called Great-Grandpa, Grandpa, and Grandma, not Daddy.

Lilly stared at the door frame without answering.

Blake asked strangely, “Lilly?”

Lilly looked at him and blinked, then finally called firmly, “Daddy!”

Hearing that, Blake was so glad and excited that he accidentally hit his head on the door frame.

The men on duty in the dark were stunned to see that scene.

Lilly seemed to have prepared. She instantly lay on Blake's shoulders and unscathed. She glanced at the door frame, then at Blake's head.
