Eight Uncles' Beloved Treasure (Lily)

Chapter 971

Lily understood after Josh's explanation, "The Holy Mother implies that she is too kind to have her own bottom line, right?" Josh nodded. "Yes, for example, if everyone suggests that drug dealers deserve to die. The Holy Mother will stand in line with drug dealers, telling everyone how pitiful they are; we should forgive them." Josh felt sick as he talked, "The Holy Mother, with her uncountable stupidity, is far more disgusting. They have many forms now; I will give you more examples when we run into them." Lily nodded.

Blair took note of any changes to be made to the dress and saw Lily and Josh hiding in the corner, muttering. He said softly, "Mr. Anthony, are these your children? They are adorable." Anthony did not explain, "Thank you."

Blair focused on the wedding dress and exhorted, "I will make the modification today as there are only five days left before the wedding day. Mrs. Crawford has lost so much weight since a month ago. Mr. Anthony should take care of her, as women will experience anxiety prior to marriage." Anthony frowned slightly and said, "I see. It's none of your business." Blair took a brief pause before continuing, perhaps sensing his hostility towards him.

Lily and Josh could see her. She could sense that Josh had several 'weapons' on him, and there was an aura from Lily, as if something very powerful was hidden. She looked at them with pity on her face and said, "I see you! Why do you pursue this career when you are so young?" She believed that these two kids had received Taoist training since they were young. How pitiful. They should be the happiest kids. Why would The Crawford Family force them to study Taoism? The Holy Mother Ghost couldn't help but cast a pitying glance at them. "Are you guys here for me? You can catch me, but remember to let me go afterwards. Can you promise me?" She was not even planning to run away; she would

Blair didn't get annoyed when was interrupted by the two kids. He patiently told some stories of his experience as a wedding dress designer.

Ordinary couples usually customized their wedding dresses and tried their best to be in shape before they got married. Meanwhile, couples from rich families would request adjustments just before the wedding to make the dress fits better. The extra fabric that wouldn't spoil the wedding dress could be added or removed during adjustments.

"Actually, I would also do adjustments for ordinary couples."

Lilly asked in concern, "Will you charge extra for it?"

Blair shook his head, "No, I don't. I know they had spent a lot when they came to me to order their dress."

Blair believed that everyone had the privilege to wear the most beautiful wedding dress that suits them. That was the reason he still served couples from ordinary families compared to other luxury wedding dress designers.

Lilly nodded, "I agree with that."

The Crawford family members who were woken up by the magpies were stunned at the scene. "Since everyone is awake now. Let's get ready for the wedding," said Bettany who came back to her senses.

According to the custom of the Crawford family, the groom had to pick up the bride at her house and play some games before they could get back to the groom's house to exchange wedding vows. Then, they would proceed with the grand wedding ceremony at a luxury hotel with other guests.

Lilly had planned out a schedule ahead. Anthony had to arrive at Lisa's house before 9:15 AM and picked her up at 10:30 AM to return to Crawford's mansion. After that, they had to arrive at the hotel before 11:30 AM to greet the guests.

Lisa and her bridesmaids were waiting at the villa Anthony bought for her. It was half an hour's drive away from Crawford's mansion.

However, there was something unusual about her bridesmaids.

"Hurry up! What are you waiting for?" Bettany rushed her sons.

The Crawford brothers immediately sprang into action.

"This wedding is quite special. I'll prepare more underworld bank notes for the bridesmaids," Jonas said.

Zachary looked at Josh and Drake. "What about me?" he asked.

"You just realized it?" Josh asked.

Bettany got dressed and went out. She saw Zachary was in a daze. She held his hands and said, "Granny is with you."

Zachary looked up and held Bettany's hand tightly.

"Am I the extra one, Granny?" Zachary asked in an upset manner. He blushed after asking that.

“No way. You’re as important as others. When we picked up the bride, we had to go in odd numbers. Eight of your uncles needed Charlie to make up an odd number. We have you to make up the odd number for the children. You’re not an extra.”

“Why do we have to go in odd numbers when we pick up the bride?” Zachary asked curiously.

“Good things come in pairs. We left with an odd number and we returned with an even number counting the bride.”

Helen felt envious when she looked at the Crawford family who was still standing strong.

Since the Crawford family did not support her financially anymore, Helen turned into a shabby old lady.

She recently watched the news and saw Bettany living a luxurious lifestyle. She felt that life was unfair.

Moreover, she had some health problems now. She needed someone to take care of her. She couldn’t count on Winona, who was sentenced to jail for 25 years.

She could only think of Hannah.

Helen usually dared not approach the Crawford family. She knew that they could get Winona out of jail since they could send her to jail. Today was a great opportunity for her.

Jonas teased from outside, "Didn't you say you would be the first to open the door for us?"

Bryson smiled, "What's wrong, Edward? You peed?"

Edward turned red, "No!"

Everyone in the Crawford family knew that there were ghosts in Lilly's jar of souls.

"What? A billion is too much."

"It's not much for you, sir..." the ghost bride said sadly.

Click – the door was unexpectedly locked!

Wait, didn't I already pass through all the obstacles?

Lilly had dealt with all the ghost spirits in the jar of souls, even persuading Blake MacNeil to join their side.

This shouldn't be happening...

But then, a figure of Pablo Belmont's soul appeared at the door.

Master Belmont's lips curved slightly as he said, " Mr. Anthony, you are not short of money, are you?"

Anthony Crawford: "..."

Pablo Belmont continued, "Don't worry, I'm not lacking either."

Anthony Crawford: "..."

Pablo Belmont said, "For this round, I will ask you three questions. If you can answer them correctly, you can take Lisa Mccarthy with you."

Anthony Crawford nodded and said, "Go ahead."

Pablo Belmont's smile faded a bit, and a seriousness appeared in his eyes. "Do you know that she is not an ordinary person?"

Anthony Crawford uttered, "I know."

Pablo Belmont continued, "Do you know that she cannot stay in the mortal world like this?"

Anthony Crawford hesitated for a moment, and for some reason, his heart suddenly felt a pang of pain.

In every live-streaming room, the appearance of the Crawford family instantly skyrocketed their popularity.

As the car door at the forefront opened, the groom stepped out and extended his hand to help the bride out of the car.

Lisa was nervous, and the narrow car door made her worried about scraping her diamond.

As she got out of the car, she stumbled and plunged directly into Anthony's arms.

The force pushed Anthony two steps backward.

"Cough..." Anthony finally managed to stop, nearly coughing up his lungs.

Lisa looked up with an apologetic expression. "I'm sorry!"

Anthony couldn't help but smile and gently patted her head. "No need to apologize."

The live chat was quiet for several seconds. Why? Because everyone was taking screenshots...

Helen engaged in playful behavior, but she hesitated to avoid causing alarm to the Crawford family stationed at the entrance on the opposite side. Consequently, she refrained from making excessive movements.

Instead, she decided to continue talking to establish her connection to the Crawford family. She claimed to be a relative, specifically the grandmother of one of the young ladies in the Crawford family. To validate her statement, she suggested seeking confirmation from someone else.

When asked for her invitation card, Helen explained that she had accidentally dropped it. Similarly, when requested her phone number, she claimed to be an elderly person unfamiliar with operating phones.

Witnessing Helen being pushed and about to fall, Blair promptly intervened and supported her, inquiring about the situation.

The hostess expressed her concern, stating, "This person wants to enter, and we allowed her, but she refuses to cooperate."

In a gentle and persuasive tone, Blair addressed the situation, saying, "It's not easy for an elderly person. If you have something to say, please take your time and speak calmly. There's no need to push people."

Although Blair's appearance may not have been particularly attractive, he possessed a tall and slender frame, dressed impeccably, exuded an impressive demeanor, and spoke with remarkable gentleness and politeness. Consequently, a few individuals were drawn to him and agreed with his sentiments.

"Yes, you're right. It's not easy when one grows old. Perhaps there's a misunderstanding."

"She doesn't seem like she's lying, and she has been speaking here for quite some time. There must be a reason."

“Young lady, don’t be so harsh on the elderly!”

Miss Etiquette intervened, feeling a sense of injustice.

Helen wiped away her tears. "My daughter didn't cherish it, but what could I say? I didn't dare to interfere. Today I saw that the eldest son of the Crawford family got married, so I wanted to ask Hannah to give him a gift bag. The most important thing is to meet Hannah."

Helen did not lie. Her purpose today was indeed to meet Hannah.

No one was giving her a pension. She wanted to find Hannah to get some pocket money every month. Before Hannah grew up, she hoped to improve her relationship with Hannah.

Blair got it and expressed understanding.

This granny is also pitiful. Her child was divorced and ran away. She's the only one left. Because of her daughter's troubles, she dared not come to the Crawford family even if she wanted to see her granddaughter.

Blair looked at Helen. Seeing her bewildered and embarrassed, he felt even more sympathetic.

"Follow me this way. The young masters and ladies of the Crawford family should be there."

Blair was familiar with the wedding scene. Before the bride walked to the groom, he needed to check on the wedding dress.

The flower girl was waiting with the bride on the other side, so Hannah should be there too.

When Blair arrived at the bridal dressing room, the staff was busy.
