

Enchanted 379

In the afternoon, Irish accompanied Mary to go shopping in order to celebrate this holiday. Mary was actually a thrifty woman, and that was why Steven would respect her so much, and he would even give all his money to Mary and mind the financial problems of the family. Just as Mary said, men can only own either face or money, but not both.

What made Irish admire her most was that Mary was tempted to discount and insist on buying things just a day earlier before the holiday. Therefore, she would always lecture them if they bought things in advance because she believed that the price would be lowest just a day before the holiday since the price of the product would be reduced after the holiday.

Therefore, when she was shopping in the supermarket among the crowds, she then realized perhaps many people had the same opinion as her aunt since it was so crowded there.

Mary rolled up her sleeves and was ready to go on a shopping spree while talking with Irish, "I am so confused why don't people go out on a trip, but closely packed together, shopping in the crowd."

Mary was going to buy an apartment for Irish during this period since the house prices were rising fast, and she wanted to catch the opportunity. However, after searching for some high-quality availability, she found that the price was extremely high, which was beyond her imagination. When she finally decided to buy a good apartment for Irish, the house price began to rise again.

What made her more unacceptable was that when she decided to pay the down payment directly, she was still shut out since those sales staff would receive those customers who were going to pay the full payment.

Mary had been upset for a few days, and she couldn't help wondering why there were so many rich people. When she was still seeking the basic living guarantee, those rich people were pursuing value investment. Naturally, Jay didn't want her mother to be upset, so he was liberal of his money to help her. Finally, Irish got this news and hastily stopped her since she didn't want to buy a house at present.

Hearing this, Steven began to worry that Irish would leave them without noticing someday. She immediately comforted them and promised them that she would buy an apartment as soon as possible and get married to a man who had his own house. However, Steven satirized her and said she was doing the air-for-asset.

Therefore, when they were shopping in the supermarket and found the rising product price, Mary was a little bit anxious while Irish had to comfort her patiently. Mary puckered her mouth but said nothing.

Soon Irish found that her sleeves had been rolled up already, and it seemed that she was ready to go on a shopping spree. After seeing this, Irish hastily held her arms and persuaded, "Aunt, we can go to another supermarket to buy goods there."

However, Mary was so stubborn, rubbing her hands and insisted on going shopping in this market, "Irish, trust me. I will win. Wait for me here."

Absolutely, she would trust her since she was an iron lady. She wore a red sweater today, so she was very eye-catching in the crowd. And she felt that it was hard for her to move in the crowd, and she also did not expect that her aunt, Mary, would be so prompt. Before she could react, Mary had rushed back with several bags in her hands, and she didn't even sweat that shocked Irish.

For the whole afternoon, Irish was in the shopping mall with Mary, but she stayed for a long time while passing by a cake shop.

Finally, her small jeep was suffused with the goods they bought in the afternoon. Mary's red sweater was well matched with her red jeep, but when she got in the car, she felt it was a little bit crowded. However, Mary was in a good mood since she had bought many good products this afternoon. After getting in the car, she said cheerfully, "Let's go home now!"

Irish soon started the car, but unexpectedly when she was just driving out of the parking lot, her car was rear-ended, which shocked Mary as well as Irish violently. "Who is it?" Mary shouted.

But before she could finish her words, Irish rushed out of the car and found a large luxury car slammed into her small jeep, which irritated Irish. She rushed to the car and knocked on the window, pointing at the driver, "Get out of your car immediately." She yelled.

Mary also got out of the car and knocked on the window with Irish. After a few seconds, the driver got out helplessly. When he saw Irish, he was surprised and then hastily apologized to her while Irish was silent for a moment. He looked familiar, but she couldn't remember where she had seen him before. She was slightly relieved by his apology and then said, "You have to compensate for it."

The driver faltered and made an ambiguous statement.

"Are you dumb?" Mary shouted at him, full of rage.

"Miss. Lake, I didn't mean it." Irish was shocked since he called her Miss. Lake.

When she was in astonishment, a woman's unpleasant voice sounded from the car. "What's wrong?"

Irish was familiar with this voice which made her feel disgusted. She looked inside the car and saw Shirley get out of it. Obviously, she did not expect that it was Irish, so she was stunned for a while and then sneered, "What happened?"

And soon, another woman got out of the car. It was from Kelly. She stepped forward and took a look at the driver unpleasantly, "Why are you so careless?"

"Yes, why are you so obtrusive? Do you know who she is? We all dare not to offend her. Though it was an old and cheap car, you can't be so saucy." Shirley said sarcastically while the driver apologized continuously.

Mary recognized her and turned severe, especially when she looked at Shirley, she was filled with rage. When she was about to walk forward, Irish stopped her with her hands crossed and said coldly to Shirley with her dreamy eyes, "Yes, it is an old and cloddy car because I don't have a sugar daddy like you. Compensate for me, or I will call the police."

"Don't talk too much with them. Call the police now." Mary shouted beside her.