Adam also felt that she was quickening up, so he looked back at her and made a gesture to hint to her to take care of herself.

However, Irish's heart violently trembled when she saw this gesture, and her thoughts were interrupted.

Adam, who was dressed in his green and blue mountaineering suit, became blurry in her eyes.

"Watch out!"

Leo roared while Irish felt that she slipped, and then the whole body swayed violently and then fell vertically.

She screamed and felt the cold wind on both sides of her body.

When she fell, a few inexplicable lights splashed in her mind, lighting her eyes.

She seemed to have seen a newspaper with a lot of news on it, and then a strange memory broke into her brain.

At this moment, she seemed to hear Leo and Adam's voices, and her waist was blocked by something that entangled her tightly, stopping her from falling down.

"Irish," Leo called her anxiously.

Irish then found that the safety rope protected her, and she was hanging in the air while the yellow safety rope saved her life. She looked up along the rope and found Leo holding the rope tightly.

When she fell down, she passed Leo, and now she was at the end of the tie while Leo was in the middle position. In this way, Leo had to look down at her, and his face soon turned pale. She couldn't determine whether he was startled by her or was because of his acrophobia.

Adam also tightened the rope at the top to fix Leo.

It seemed that he was also frightened by her and made a gesture to Irish.

The new memory in Irish's mind was becoming clear, and many pictures began to show up in her mind madly.

Leo was so anxious and shouted at her, "How do you feel now?"

Irish tried to touch the mountain wall, but she failed because of the slope; so she dared not to act rashly anymore since she was afraid that she would implicate the two men, so she made the "Okay" sign with her fingers.

Adam was about to give up climbing and gestured to Leo while Leo also cooperated with him and began to use the double main rope to descend.

Though Leo's face was relieved, he dared not to relax his vigilance because he was afraid that he would shake the safety buckle at Irish's waist if he lessened his hands, so he grabbed the rope tightly during the process.

Irish also fell down gradually.

Thanks to the high-end equipment Adam brought, they could descend quickly and save much time, avoiding the danger of the safety buckle being broken.

When they finally touched the ground, Leo and Adam rushed to ask about Irish's situation.

The safety buckle hadn't been unbuttoned yet, and she just sat on the ground, frowning and her hand held her ankle, "It hurts."

Leo held her to the car without hesitation.

Adam and Leo sent her to the hospital, and it was not until they arrived that Leo's pale face returned to normal.

Leo found the nearest hospital for treatment since he didn't know the seriousness of her injury. She had to see a doctor as soon as possible, and luckily there were not too many people during this time, so they didn't have to wait any longer.

Irish was absent-minded when she was sent to the department of orthopedics, but she still looked pale.

Adam and Leo had to wait outside when Irish was accepting the check.

Inside the consulting room, the nurse helped Irish to take off her shoes and found there was blood.

The doctor made a careful examination and asked her the reason for her injury while Irish explained it clearly. The doctor touched her ankle, and Irish felt so painful that the cold sweat slipped down from her forehead.

"It is just a superficial wound, and the bones didn't get hurt, but the large contusion of the skin tissue caused extravasated blood."

Irish was afraid that she would be crippled, so she began to be suspicious of the doctor's words. "Why would I feel severe pain if my bone didn't get hurt?"

The doctor smiled and replied, "Though you have good equipment, your ankle bone hit violently against the mountain wall, and what's more, you slipped down, and you may have a joint sprain."

Irish hesitated.

Perceiving her worries, the doctor said, "If you are really worried, then you can accept the CT scan."

"Okay. I will take the CT scan." Irish was worried that she would be a cripple in the future, and if that happened to her, how could she still be with Joseph?

The doctor was amused by her and was about to make a list for her, but they also asked her if she was pregnant since the pregnant woman couldn't accept a CT scan.

"What?" Obviously, Irish was shocked by the doctor's question. "No." She replied indefinitely.

"Are you sure? You must know that a pregnant woman can't accept a CT scan." The doctor asked her again.

Irish was hesitant. "No. Perhaps "She was not sure, and she suddenly remembered that she didn't have menstruation this month yet, but sometimes the menses were irregular, and she never worried about that.

"You are not sure?" The doctor stopped and added, "Well, I must take some blood to test your progesterone first."

"It is impossible for me to be pregnant. Make a list for me, please, and I will accept the CT scan as soon as possible."

However, the doctor declined her request and asked her to take a blood test first.

While waiting for the blood test result, Irish returned to the department of orthopedics.

After a few minutes, she was called to the doctor's office since the result had come out.

Irish waited for the doctor to give her the list and didn't look at the blood test result because she thought her menses were irregular sometimes, and Joseph would take measures when they had sex.

The doctor looked at the result and said slowly, "Ms. Irish, you can't accept the CT scan because you are pregnant."
