Chapter 148: Be sure to dig up their background

Benjamin Johnson was seething with inner rage, and his handsome face had turned stormy.

He picked up his cup and gulped down the beverage inside.

“Jay Bennett, you are too naive, you are also too kind!”

“I know you are still brooding over your sister’s death, yet it was an accident that no one wanted to happen. Let it go, you will be happier that way.”

Realizing his emotional instability, Benjamin reined in his temper, “I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to blame you. Your sister’s car accident was indeed not an accident. The culprit had cancer and knew he wouldn’t live much longer. He deliberately hit your sister. It was Daniel Marshall who killed her. Before the accident happened, the culprit’s family had all moved away. This was a premeditated act.”

“Up to now, we have not found the culprit’s family. They either purposely hide or have already left the country. If there was no one assisting them, they wouldn’t have been able to leave so smoothly, so coincidentally.” Jay Bennett was taken aback, staring blankly at Benjamin.

He didn’t know about this. Daniel had never mentioned it to him.

But he knew that Daniel had not given up on the case. He was still investigating.

Helplessly shrugging his shoulders, Benjamin stopped talking. He poured another glass of the drink and downed it in one gulp.

“Sorry, I got a little upset.”

“I know you’re upset. I also hope you can be happier.”

Benjamin hesitated for a moment before tentatively asking, "Daniel didn't mention his wife to you?"

"He did say he wanted to introduce his wife to me, but I refused. I don't want to meet that woman. In this way, I can still imagine my sister living happily with him. I just pretend she's still alive. It's been five years, I can't selfishly ask him to stay single all the time. If there's someone to keep him company, I think my sister would be relieved."

Benjamin piled food onto Jay's plate, "You eat more, the food here is good."

Jay Bennett smiled, "Actually, I'm also very happy. All of you take good care of me, love me, and offer me a worry-free environment. My sister as she watches from heaven, she would be at peace."

Benjamin didn't speak, but stroked Jay's head like he used to.

Her hair was soft and comforting to touch. His anger was gradually subsiding.

Jay was so naive that he couldn't bear for her to know too much. So, he decided to keep his mouth shut.

From time to time, Olivia Jenkins would glance at the small pavilion.

William Jacobs asked, "Chief Jenkins, is the Jenkins Group really going to cooperate with Zenith Capital? What are Benjamin Johnson's conditions?"

Olivia Jenkins mystically replied, "He didn't say anything, let him look at the proposal first."

Lowering his voice, William Jacobs said, "It's making progress, one of the auditors from Quiet Video started to spill. The loan from Daily Finance Debt Company was actually borrowed by Vice President Charles under the name of the former Chief Jenkins. The former Chief Jenkins didn't know about it."

Olivia listened intently, her eyebrows knitting together, "Continue, be sure to dig out all their secrets and tear down their den."

William Jacobs nodded, "The collaboration with Newstar Media Company was all directly approved by Vice President Charles. He bought those trashy movies at high prices, he must have taken a lot of kickbacks."

A wave of inscrutability flashed through Olivia's eyes, "Is there any evidence of asset transfers in the group?"

"There's no definite pointing at the moment, the finance director is still keeping a tight mouth. He neither answers nor replies when questioned, always pretending to be asleep."

Olivia momentarily spaced out, dissecting the finance director's personal information in her mind, she had a way to deal with the finance director now..
