

Fated out Chapter 21

Chapter 21

If she said that it was exactly like what Whitney said, the Larson couple would definitely think that she was lying.

This was the brilliance of the Green Tea B*tch. w@W.N@e1(w)(o)r(m).com

If she said the truth, no one would believe her. If she told a lie, it was an indirect admission of guilt. No matter what, she could not escape the charges.

But...

"Just as she said, she wasn't careful and fell down."

Whitney saw the sudden rise of anger on James's and Julianna's face. She was gleeful, but felt that this was not enough. Ww@.(n)(o)VéŁw(o)Rm.cOm

"Dad and Mom, see, what I said was true. My sister really didn't push me. I accidentally fell down. Don't be angry with her."

James ordered, "Apologize to your sister." w@W.Novéłworm.c@M

However, Julianna was dissatisfied, and added, "You aren't allowed to eat dinner tonight. If you go hungry, perhaps you will gain some clarity on what you should and shouldn't do."

"An apology is due, but it should be her apologizing to me." "Just as the Larson couple were furious, Jessica raised her hand and interrupted them, "Don't be so eager to be angry."

"What else do you want to say?" Julianna did not believe that this damn brat was innocent.

Jessica pointed to a maid, and said, "Come over."

The maid stepped forward suspiciously. Just before she came forward, Jessica suddenly pushed hard, and the maid fell heavily to the ground. The people around her were surprised, but the maid looked at her in shock.

Jessica looked at James, and asked, "Do you understand now?"

James was not Julianna, so he definitely understood, and looked at Whitney sternly.

Whitney was a little scared by his expression. "Dad, I..."

Would she be blamed?

No, she would not be blamed, because she said that she fell for herself, and they did not believe her.

James looked at Julianna. "In the future, if you haven't got the facts straight, don't blindly go on a rant."

Julianna was dumbfounded by his words. "Hubby, what do you mean? Do you really believe what she said? It is Whitney who is injured now, yet you are still helping her. Didn't you see what she did just now? Look at how skilled she was, pushing Wilmar just now."

James could not be bothered to talk to this idiot.

Jessica smiled, and said, "Madam, I can understand that you didn't see things clearly. You shouldn't be angry as well." That last sentence was meant for James.

"What do you mean?"

The maids, the Larson couple, and Whitney did not understand.

Jessica pointed to the maid on the ground, and firmly said, "Look clearly at the direction where she fell on the ground. According to the law of inertia, if I pushed her and she fell, she should have the posture of leaning backwards on the ground. Look again at your precious daughter. She is leaning forward. Besides, I was in front, so how could I push her from behind?"

Julianna was startled, but she quickly came to her senses. "Whitney, did she push you from behind?"

-What she said scared Whitney. She really did not consider that, but Julianna's words made her the victim again. The little b*tch almost gained the upper hand.

"Mom, my sister didn't push me from behind." As she spoke, she grunted in pain, and it made Julianna's heart ache. She glared at Jessica in displeasure.

There was a flash of arrogance in Whitney's eyes.

Let's see how she will fight back now.

Chapter 21

Jessica rested her chin on her palm, widened her eyes, and leisurely said, "Oh no, this is a tricky situation. Both parties claim to be in the right. However... the injury of someone pushed from the back and falling to the back is very different. Especially since according to where she fell, it can be seen that the person pushing her from behind should be standing on the stairs. The injuries from falling from the stairs are different from those from falling on the ground. We just have to check her injuries, and it will be obvious.

"My good sister, can I trouble you to show us your injured arms and legs?"

Whitney was frightened and uncertain, but when she saw Jessica's confident look, she felt extremely guilty. Jessica's eyes were shining.

"Whitney, let Mom take a look," Julianna gently said.

"Mom, I really fell down on my own. Why don't you believe it?" Whitney said rather angrily.

James was not Madam Larson, and he could tell that Whitney's attitude was completely different. He understood at once. Seeing Whitney's pale face, the displeasure in his heart vanished.

"Alright, let's just eat. Later, let Doctor Vicknesh come over to give her a checkup," James said decisively.

As for Whitney's scheme, the Larson couple did not mention it again or punish Whitney. They did not even verbally reprimand her.

These were her biological parents. They could not see her grievances, and only saw Whitney's injury.

Jessica looked at their backs, and a sneer appeared on her lips. w@W.т0@êłWorm.c0m

It was just...

She placed her hand gently on her heart. Why did it hurt so much and feel so uncomfortable?

She obviously did not care anymore, so why did it hurt?

Mrs. Willow looked at Jessica who was alone and sighed. She gently said, "Miss, let's eat. It will get better after some time."

Will it?

It won't. As long as Whitney is here, it never will.

Jessica looked at the maid whom she pushed, and said, "Give me your bank account number or any other payment method."

The maid did not understand what she was going to do, but she obediently gave her her bank account number.

After Jessica was done, she did not say anything and left.

When she left, the maid exclaimed in surprise.

The maids at the side glanced at her with eyes full of envy.

Just now, everyone felt that she was unlucky, and that Jessica was being too overbearing, but after seeing the 20,000 dollars she received, all of the other servants wished they had been selected instead.

"Ok, don't stay here anymore. Get to work," Mrs. Willow said.

Just now, she was thinking about speaking up for Jessica, but it seemed that she did not need to do it anymore. It seemed that she had read her mind and settled the situation by herself.

To these girls, money showed their sincerity more than an apology, and people liked them more because of that.

At the dining table, Whitney looked at Jessica from time to time, wanting to see anger or irritation on her face. Unfortunately, she didn't see anything.

She was really tolerant!

Jess, next week, you will go to St. Daniel School with Whitney. If you don't understand anything, you can ask Whitney." James turned to look at Whitney. "You have to take care of your sister in school."

"Ok, Dad," Whitney said sweetly.

Jessica faintly responded, "Ok."

In the corridor on the second floor, Whitney intercepted her when she saw her, and asked, "Were you the one responsible for the situation on the Internet?"

Jessica directly pushed her away and walked past her. Suddenly, she paused, and whispered in her ear, "I forgot to tell you something. I said that you can tell one's position on the stairs by checking one's injuries, but it was just nonsense. I didn't expect you to believe it."

Whitney's eyes widened. Seeing her walk away with a smile, she gritted her teeth.

This little b*tch!

She seriously deserved to die!
