Chapter 9 Jocelyn can't sing and dance

Soon, Allen walked in.

As soon as he entered, he moved a chair and sat in front of the computer.

Then, Allen let out a long and helpless sigh, gently stroked Jocelyn's hair and said, "Yesterday, I was harsh to you, so I apologize to you."

Jocelyn shook her head, "Dad, it's okay, I know you were just too angry yesterday."

"Actually, when I calmed down and thought about it, not to mention that you didn't do that, even if you really did do that, it was still the right thing to do."

"After all, they were indeed inhumane." Allen gritted his teeth at the mention of this matter.

Jocelyn's heart warmed, and with a heart full of emotion, she leaned her head on Allen's shoulder and softly said, "Thank you for caring about me, Dad."

"Silly girl, I am your father, if I don't care about you, who will?" Allen said.

Jocelyn smiled, so innocent and unbridled.

"In fact, sometimes I often wonder if I shouldn't have remarried after your mother died in the first place."

"If I hadn't remarried, I would have only had you as a daughter, and there wouldn't be so many conflicts tangled up now."

"And you wouldn't have wandered outside alone for three whole years." Allen said.

As soon as the words left his mouth, he let out another long sigh, "I am sorry for you."

Jocelyn shook her head, "Dad, you have nothing to apologise for, everyone has the right to pursue happiness."

"About Gloria's marriage to that son of a bitch from the Stewart family, there's nothing you can do to stop it, if they aren't engaged, it would be okay. Now the key is that they have been engaged. I hope you can understand."

"Dad, I understand. Moreover, there is no need for you to stop it, I no longer have feelings for Joseph." Jocelyn added.
