Chapter 91 Let's Live Together (2)

"No, I will open it in some time." Noah said.

Jocelyn's heart tightened at that.

She had instructed Noah on every detail, but this was the only thing she had forgotten to remind him of.

She was now telling her father that he would be opening a hospital some time later and would no longer be away, that meant that they would be living under his watchful eye for the next few days.

There would be frequent contact in order to cater to her father.

The most important thing was the hospital.

She had said that he had returned to open the hospital, and if he did not open it for a long time in the country, her father would certainly be suspicious, right?

Noah was a smart person, why did he make a mistake at this point? Even if she didn't remind him, he should have said that he would return to Y Country soon and not open the hospital for the time being.

If that was the case, a lot of trouble could have been saved and they would only need to come back occasionally to deal with her father during the New Year holidays.

Now that he had said it, she couldn't say anything against it.

She maintained her calmness and looked at him with a smile, "Honey, I actually think we can wait to open the hospital. Before opening the hospital, I think you should work in another hospital for some time, firstly, to accumulate experience, and secondly, to learn about the business model of hospitals."

Noah smiled and nodded, "You are right."

Looking at his son-in-law who was so obedient, Allen nodded in satisfaction, "Noah, what Jocelyn said also makes sense, but if you want to open it immediately, it is possible. If you are not experienced enough, you can hire a vice president who has more experience."

"Dad, I'll still listen to my wife, her words are holy writ." Noah said.

Allen nodded contentedly once again, "Well, you're not bad."

With those words, Allen laughed happily.

As soon as Sara came downstairs, she saw the happy scene of the few of them, and inwardly she was even more jealous beyond words.

She now felt that she had simply become an outsider.

She was obviously a member of the family, but she was not involved in any of the family's affairs.

"I bought that villa together with this one a long time ago, no one has ever lived in it. The decoration and the layout is similar to the one here, what do you think?" Allen asked.

For a moment, Jocelyn actually didn't know how to answer.

Just because of an oversight, so many things had to change.

Since Noah had said that he was going to live in the country permanently, then her father would definitely arrange a house for them to live together.

It would be naturally inappropriate for her to remain living in her father's house like an unmarried young girl.

"Dad, there's no need, don't I have a finely furnished duplex in the city centre in my name? I'll just go live there with my husband." she said.

There was no way she would agree to live next door to her own house.

That would mean that she would have to live with Noah every day.

If they didn't live together, her father would surely find out.

So she might as well say she would go to the house downtown.

It was far away from home, not under her father's nose, and if she lived there alone, he could not possibly know about it.

"Jocelyn, do you really want to do that?" Allen pulled long his face.

"Dad, what do you mean?" Jocelyn looked confused.

She could feel that her father was angry, but had absolutely no idea why he was so angry.

"The reason I want you to live next door is because I couldn't want you get too far away from me, do you understand? Originally I was going to let you live at home."

"But I know that young people want privacy, so I came up with this compromise."

"Now that Gloria has left home, and her mother and I are getting divorced, don't you think I would look like a lonely old man if you leave?" Allen still had a reluctant look on his face.

When he said that, Jocelyn's heart immediately began to sour, and she was even embarrassed to continue refusing.

But if she didn't refuse ruthlessly, then she would have to live with Noah.

This was all outside her plan.

It was all Noah's fault for answering the question carelessly.

On the side, Noah silently got up and poured two cups of tea, one for Allen and one for Jocelyn.

"On purpose?"

Noah took a deep drag of his cigarette and exhaled slowly, looking at her calmly, thinking that sometimes it's really quite troublesome when a woman was smart.

"Did you hope for a chance to increase your salary, so you deliberately didn't reject my father?" Jocelyn asked.

Noah frowned slightly, "No."

Where was this all going?

"Then it means you want to live with me?" Jocelyn teased, fully intending to give up on the pursuit.

Noah did not say a word, extinguishing his cigarette with one hand and throwing it into the bin next to him.

A series of movements was smooth and sharp.

The next second, his gaze fell on her face, "What do you think?"

Seeing that he looked calm, Jocelyn gradually dispelled her inner doubts.

It should be that she was thinking too much.

From what she had seen so far, she didn't think that Noah was a money-hungry person, he had always given off the impression that he treated money like dirt.

They hadn't known each other for very long, and even if they had spent one night before, he couldn't have liked her, so trying to live together was probably out of the question.

Thinking about it, her mind couldn't help but recall the image of that night again.

Her face was blushing. Crazy, why was she remembering that night again?

"What are you thinking about? You're blushing." He asked.

"Nothing." She quickly retracted her thoughts and started the car, "Since you don't want to go next door to see the house, let's take a drive and get familiar with the neighbourhood, after all you're going to be living here next."

"Fine."

At these words, Jocelyn steadily turned the car around and drove towards the door of the house.

The roadside was covered with unmelted snow, and as far as the eye could see, it was white.

The Murphy family's location was far from the hustle and bustle of the city, and there were hardly any pedestrians on the road at the moment, with only a few scattered cars passing by.

Jocelyn's car was able to drive completely unimpeded.

She patiently showed him the locations of the nearby supermarkets and some daily necessities shops.

After that, the two of them returned home together.

"So the dish I cooked that day was sweet?" Jocelyn was a bit in disbelief.

If that was the case it wouldn't be edible at all, right?

"Yes." Noah said lightly, that sweet dinner really impressed him.

"That's not edible at all, is it? Sorry." Jocelyn was embarrassed.

"It is delicious." Noah said.

"How can it be delicious? That's sugar." Although she had never eaten a purely sweet dish, she could imagine how unpalatable it must be.

"I like it sweet." He said.

Jocelyn was warmed by him.

Noah was cold on the outside, but he was still quite warm on the inside and was very good at comforting and taking care of people.

"Alright, don't say anything against your will. Seriously, you should have poured out all the food that day."

"No." He said again.

Jocelyn was shocked.

"Then you ate it?" Jocelyn asked tentatively.

"Yeah."

Jocelyn instantly gave him a thumbs up, "Awesome."

"Is it sweet enough?" Noah changed the subject and his chin lifted lightly towards her lemonade.

Jocelyn took a taste.

The sweetness was just right.

The faint fragrance of lemon mixed with the sweet and sour taste spread out in the mouth.

She smiled and gave him a thumbs up, "Nice."

He hooked his lips, put the condiment box back and sat beside her quietly sipping the lemonade.

"Tom has told you, right?" Scott was very serious.

"Yes." Noah responded calmly.

"I mainly have another sentence that I forgot to ask Tom to bring to you, so I will now add that if there is anything you don't understand in the process of getting along with my daughter-in-law, remember to ask me, no one knows more about love than I do."

This confident tone of his was like that of a certain comic leader.

Noah slowly exhaled a puff of smoke, "Okay."

"You brat, I always thought you were a gay before, and was even prepared for you to take Tom home and announce your love affair." Scott did not shy away from it.

"....." Noah helplessly held his forehead, thinking that he was so straight, how could he be a gay?

The corners of Tom's mouth immediately began to twitch wildly when he heard this.

What exactly was it that gave the chairman this illusion?

Noah did not want to continue this topic, he directly changed, "How is your health?"

"Quite well, though, I hope you can get your mother back to Y Country as soon as possible, I miss her." Speaking of Allie, Scott's tone was much softer.

"Can you tell her yourself?"

"Aren't you talking nonsense? If she listened to me, why would I call you? It's all because I was too reassuring to her by being with your grandfather, I shouldn't have come to Y Country in the first place."

Noah helplessly held his forehead, "..... I'll try."

She didn't even listen to her father's words, let alone his.

"Don't try, be sure."

"You haven't met just for a month?" Noah took a drag from his cigarette.

"More than a month, she has been back to Z Country for just a month, and before she went to Z County, she also went to the company in M Country to help me explain some things, that visit was also three days, so a month and three days to be exact." Scott said again.

Chapter 96 He Seemed to Have Been Kept by Jocelyn

After entering the door, Jocelyn then took Noah all the way up to the second floor and pushed open the door of a bedroom.

The bedroom was just as opulent as the one downstairs.

The room had floor-to-ceiling windows that took up an entire wall, an oversized open balcony, a fluffy kingsize bed, a large wardrobe that took up an entire wall, a high end desktop computer and more.

The bed is covered in a dark blue four-piece suite, a hue that adds to the high quality of the space.

"How's that? Are you satisfied? I changed the beddings for you last night, it's all brand new. If you don't like the colour, you can change to something else, there are many more sets in the wardrobe."

"The computer was moved from next door, it's the highest configuration. If you like to play games, it will definitely bring you a different gaming experience." Jocelyn said.

"I am satisfied." He said lightly.

He could tell that she had put a lot of thought into setting up this room.

"That's good, over there is the bathroom." Jocelyn pointed to where the bathroom was.

"Okay."

"My room is next to yours, so if you need something, you can go next door and call me." With those words, Jocelyn pointed with her thumb towards the right side.

"Okay."

"Then since we're going to live together in the future, there are some things I want to talk to you about first, come over and sit down." With those words, Jocelyn naturally sat down on the sofa next to the floor-to-ceiling window.

Noah didn't say anything and calmly walked to the sofa opposite her and sat down, quietly waiting for her to speak.

"The two of us live together, we can't interfere with each other."

"You can think of our relationship as that of friends who live in the same hotel."

"You can call me if you need anything, and I will help you in any way I can."

"Well, I'm going to cook, is there anything you want to eat?" Jocelyn asked.

"I'm okay with everything." He said.

"What about something nasty?" They were going to be living together for up to a year next, and she thought she needed to get to know it properly.

"Nope."

At those words, Jocelyn turned and went into the kitchen.

The fridge had all the ingredients that her father had asked the maid to put in yesterday, and it had everything.

She took out all the ingredients she wanted to use and washed them.

After that, she made a very homely four dishes and one soup: braised pork, scrambled eggs with green peppers, shredded potatoes with sharp peppers, prawns in oil, and squid and tofu soup.

She laid everything out one by one on the square dining table and served two bowls of rice.

The green and white checkered tablecloth made the colourful and flavourful dishes look particularly attractive, as did the valuable tableware.

The rising heat gave the large house the warmth of home.

After setting up the dishes, Jocelyn walked to the door of the dining room and looked at the man who was sitting on the sofa looking at his mobile phone, "Noah, dinner is ready."

He then got up and walked towards her.

A straight black shirt and black trousers, not half creased, the cuffs of his shirt slightly rolled with a bit of laziness.

But the simplest black was interpreted by him with a different kind of elegance and nobility.

He was obviously just walking at home, but he was even more charming than those models on the catwalk who walk with delicate make-up and wear expensive clothes.

For a moment, even she, who was used to seeing beautiful men, was lost in thought.

When he approached, she turned into the restaurant and sat down.

He strutted his long legs and sat opposite her.

"I've tasted every dish today, I didn't put the wrong seasoning this time, it's especially delicious." Jocelyn said confidently.

After buying the oranges, Jocelyn then led him to the daily necessities section, intending to see if there was anything else that was not available at home.

"I seem to have forgotten to bring one thing out." Noah looked at the underwear section with a cold expression and said.

"Just buy whatever here." Jocelyn said.

Noah silently leaned down, propped his hands on the armrest of the shopping cart, looked at her face and spoke faintly, "Do you think there will be my size here?"

Jocelyn was bewildered and had no idea what he was talking about, "What?"

He didn't say anything and flicked a finger towards the location of the men's underwear.

Following where he pointed, Jocelyn soon saw not far away, men's underwear.

Her face instantly turned blushing.

How could this sound so ambiguous and shameless?

It was strange, but it sounded like he was being a hooligan, but when he said it in such a serious manner, it didn't offend her at all.

The memories that had been so easily buried came rushing back once again like a tidal wave, and the body seemed to be electrified, and her heart was racing.

His size is quite big, so it should not be available in the supermarket.

Wait why did she think of this again?

Jocelyn coughed lightly in embarrassment and looked at him, "Didn't we agree that neither would be brought up again?"

"Did I mention it?" He responded lightly, as serious as ever, standing up straight.

"....." He didn't mention it, but the words were ambiguous.

"What are you blushing about?" He said faintly.

"I am not." Jocelyn ignored him and took the trolley all the way forward, his footsteps hurried.

He did not respond, pushing the car forward all the way, as if there was an extra barrier on his body, shielding everyone from him.

When they returned home, the two of them then put all the things they had bought from the supermarket together, where they should be.

After that, they sat down together on the snow-white carpet and took out the sweeping and mopping robots, one by one, two upstairs and two downstairs.

After tidying everything up, they went back to the living room sofa and sat down in silence.

Noah took out his mobile phone and opened the Handsome Boys Club, looking indifferent as he checked the chat log.

As soon as he entered the group, he saw countless messages mentioning him.

He frowned slightly and patiently continued to scroll up.

That was when he saw exactly what they were talking about, and understood exactly what they were getting excited about.

He typed quickly, "Have an opinion?"

Immediately afterwards, Robert called.

Jocelyn remembered that she hadn't filled her mopping robot with water, so she went straight into the bathroom on the first floor, holding the mopping robot, as well as the water filling tool.

Noah clicked to answer, lightly pinching his brow, "What is wrong?"

Robert on the other end of the phone laughed lightly, "Nothing, it's just that we are curious about the progress between you and your wife."

"Nosy." Noah responded coldly.

"We don't understand you at all." Robert over there had no intention of letting Noah off the hook at all.

"....."

"Ah"

A delicate cry of pain came out from the bathroom and clearly reached Noah's ears.

He slowly shifted his gaze to her face, "What?"
"Are you really not going to take the money in WeChat?" She must return the money to Noah.
"Yes." Noah said without thinking.
As soon as his words left his mouth, Jocelyn reached out and prepared to take his phone and confirm the receipt of the money herself.
However, before her hand could touch the phone, he raised the hand holding the phone high in the air.
"Will you stop that?" Jocelyn frowned helplessly, her voice still soft.
"No." With those words, the hand he was holding the phone with simply let go in mid-air.
The phone fell immediately afterwards, the other hand catching it sharply, and he unlocked it with one hand to continue reading the news.

The action was smooth.

This was the first time she had ever seen such an operation, and she was impressed.

This person was exuding charm at all times.

Jocelyn chose to give up for now and continued to play with her phone.

After about ten minutes, Jocelyn once again reached out to try and grab his phone, which he once again held aloft.

This man was rare, how could anyone be so resistant to someone returning their money?

Jocelyn had no intention of giving up again and stood up straight away, trying to reach for it.

He soon stood up as well and continued to hold the phone high in the air, and no matter how much Jocelyn jumped, she couldn't touch the phone halfway.

His expression began to soften, the corners of his mouth curving in a very light curve as he quietly watched her jumping around in front of him.
