

Fire 1509

Chapter 1509

Kisa asked, "What did David tell you when you confronted him?"

Thomas helped her put on her coat and replied, "Not a damn thing. And he didn't breathe a word about our mom either. Come on, Kisa. He's asleep now, so we got to go. We can talk outside."

"But there are guards all over the damn place. How the hell are we supposed to escape?" Kisa asked, feeling worried.

"We can. I dug a hole in the backyard ahead of time. We'll slip out that way."

Thomas sighed, "Maybe my biological father feels guilty about me. That's probably why he let me stay here and didn't even bother to put a tail on me. Lucky for me, otherwise I wouldn't have had the chance to get you out."

Thomas spoke with conviction, and Kisa did not dwell on it further.

Once they made it to the ground floor, they made a beeline for the backyard.

"What the hell? There were guards posted outside my door. How come they are not here today?" Kisa wondered.

"Oh, I just made up some excuse to get them out of our way. We need to make a quick getaway before they catch on."

Thomas led her to the hole he had dug in the backyard.

He checked it over, seeing fresh dirt and signs that the hole

had been made by a very careful

person.

"Of course I do."

He wanted

to make sure they wouldn't be caught. Once we get out of here, we won't be under his control anymore. Even if he has a scheme, he won't be able to do anything about it. Just as Kisa was about to say something, when suddenly, the sound of chaotic footsteps came quickly said, 'Kisa, you

"No. We'll leave together."

held his

Thomas shook his head.

hurt

footsteps were getting closer, and the hole. She heard Thomas's voice, deliberately lowered, will be at the intersection of the main road where there are more cars, and it is speaking, a noise of fighting and arguing came from the other