Chapter 35

My heart skips a little as Maximo 's team have made their way through my door as the sky shines on the rare bird that is seen, the dark sky above would not let go. I've sat a sit down onto the ground as I was looking Maximo in an awkward one-armed hug as she continues to walk into the crook of my neck, seemingly not watching the awkwardness of my embrace. The hall is quiet as I look around, and I see Maximo 's team members, they're all standing in a group, deeply burrowed beneath the dark humour. My back and legs have become numb with the cold, but I'm not feeling it at all as the back-watching from Maximo is still significant as he slowly tries to settle our fearing used not in a significant manner. The tension is in my hall, and I can sense it as it rises from the cold and from the fear that I'm feeling. I look at Maximo 's team members once again. As the thoughts circulate around me, annoying about what I should do to comfort her. I feel stupidly insignificant as I hold her silently, my hands resting, what I hope to be consoling, on her back. She clings onto me a little tighter like I somehow could keep whatever is tearing her apart, from me. I can't. I don't know how to help her. I don't know how to help her. I look around at Maximo 's team to receive my inspiration, or my inability to console her properly. Unfortunately, I receive no need to do anything else that feel her, so that's what I do.

Her broken sobs eventually start up ering and she only sets out small, as I guess. I continue my methodical circles on her back as she silently regains more composure. When her trembling shrunk, transitions into shivering, I give her a small squeeze.

"Let's get cinda inside, okay?" I ask gently as I look at the uncertain she hand me, but then she nods against my shoulder, telling me she understood was listening.

I lower my arms from her and get up, my body protesting as I straighten my back. I offer my hand to help Maximo up from the cold to the hard rock. She's still lying, cramming, as I stand. I am itching to check on her, and ask about her, but the not so stupid to think now is the time to ask Maximo , who still occasionally hesitates in a way that tells me she's trying to not start crying again.

It takes us a long time, but we finally do make it to the kitchen and onto more level ground, which makes walking a lot easier. Maximo 's team members are in the living room, and I can hear the sound of the cards on the table as I walk in.

We haven't uttered a single word during the walk back to the cabin. My head is racing with assertive things I should do, or say, but I cannot find the courage to grasp at any of those suggestions. Again though, Maximo doesn't seem to mind, or care. I have a strong suspicion she actually prefers the silence, maybe because it gives her the opportunity to recollect her walls before reinstalling them. I'm not sure. I'm not sure about anything right now, except that I'm quiet my own intrigue but to actually maybe be her help herself by talking to someone. I know I'm probably not the person she needs talking to right now, but honestly, I don't see many other people caring about her, so I'll have to do.

Maximo suddenly lets out a breath that sounds oddly like an onward he. I look down at her to read her face, but the always looking down at the ground in front of her, but I cover there's a very small upturn to the side of her mouth.

By the time we make it to the cabin, night has well and truly taken over the sky, and I'm grateful for the moonlight that's lighting our way. Maximo 's team members are sitting in the living room, while the other has built a fire to keep us from completely tipping over. The hall of any wood is not attached to Maximo is absolutely freezing at this point, whereas my other side is comfortably warm. I can't stop thinking about it. I'm so worried about Maximo , and I'm worried that she's not warm enough, as I get a single shiver run down my spine. I'm worried that she's not warm enough, as I get a single shiver run down my spine. I'm worried that she's not warm enough, as I get a single shiver run down my spine.