

The First Heir – Chapter 1760

Without hesitation, Philip dialed the other party's number.

The call was quickly connected, and the person on the other end asked in confusion, "Who are you? Why do you have my personal number?"

"Homer Dunley, I'm Philip Clarke," Philip said flatly.

"Philip Clarke? I don't know you. Did you dial the wrong number?" When Homer heard this, he frowned and wanted to end the call.

However, Philip's next sentence startled him. "Your son, Hector Dunley, injured my god-sister and is fleeing back to Charbury."

"Hector?"

Homer frowned.

After contacting his son earlier, he learned that he had gotten into trouble in Upper creek after injuring a female nanny. He did not think it was a big deal then, so he did not ask much about it.

However, the other party's god-brother had taken the initiative to approach him now and was even able to get his private number in such a short time, which meant that the other party's influence was not small.

It seemed that this matter was not that simple.

After thinking about it, Homer said, "So it's about this. My son was indeed a little heavy handed and did something wrong, but it's inevitable for young people to be a little impulsive. As his father, I'll definitely take full responsibility. You can ask for any compensation you want. As long as I can do it, I'll definitely satisfy your demand. What do you think?"

Homer had always pampered his son. Since things had progressed to this point, he would naturally take the responsibility for his son.

It was just money, anyway. The Dunley family had plenty of it.

As long as the other party did not pursue the matter, he could afford to fork out a few million dollars.

However, the only thing he had overlooked was that he did not know Philip's temper and background. He thought that the name of the Dunley family could suppress everything and everyone.

Upon hearing Homer's words, Philip sneered as his eyes burst with cold intent. He stated at the neon night view outside the window and said, "Since you want to settle it privately, my condition is also very simple, tell Hector Dunley to get the f*ck back to Uppercreek right now!"

On the other end of the phone, Homer went silent upon hearing Philip.

His face was slightly cold. He did not expect the young man on the other end of the phone to be so arrogant! After a while, Homer enunciated each word, "Hector is still young, so it's normal for him to make mistakes. There's no need to go after him for such a small matter. Moreover, you should give him a chance to repent. Since you could find my private number in such a short time, it means that you're not an ordinary person. Let's do this. I'll compensate you five million dollars and this matter is over. He just hit your god-sister with a baseball bat. It's nothing. Five million is a lot. You should learn to give in."

However, Philip's face on the other end was very unpleasant, especially his eyes that could cause heart palpitations to those who saw them. He said coldly, "Five million? If you tell Hector to get the f*ck back right now, I'll give you 50 billion! I just want his life. How about that?"