Chapter 1441 Waiting For My Date

Initially, it was the Gaudette family who used the Pann family to murder Jiminy. The incident had nothing to do with Jerry, but the one who ordered his subordinate to carry out the task was actually a relative of Jerry.

Since Charlotte's mother passed away when she was still young, Jiminy practically spoiled her in the family.

If she knew that her father's death was related to Jerry, even if she had feelings for Jerry, she would still be cruel enough to deal with him.

Just by observing how Charlotte dealt with Henry and Regina, one could tell how ruthless she was.

Charlotte thought that Genevieve was referring to Jerry's scandal with other women. She snorted coldly, "I don't need to investigate. I can see it all clearly with my own eyes! Do you think I'd be unable to let go if we broke up?"

She then continued, "I'm tired of dating him for so long. Breaking up with him gives me the perfect chance to find a man who knows how to take care of a family well, so that Jessica can stop nagging me."

"I wasn't talking about this." Noticing that Charlotte had misunderstood her words, Genevieve sighed deeply.

Charlotte was annoyed, and she was swamped with work as well. Therefore, she didn't want to hear Jerry's at the moment. Without waiting for Genevieve to speak again, she used her work as an excuse to chase her out.

For quite some time, Charlotte had been working at her desk. As she picked up her cup to drink some water, she glanced at her phone casually.

Charlotte sent a message to Sean five minutes in advance. After Genevieve's car pulled over to the side of the road, she happened to see Sean driving out in his BMW.

After thanking Genevieve, she opened the door and got out of the car.

The restaurant with a starry night view that Charlotte booked had opened in the mall's dining area about three months ago. Not only did they serve Epean cuisine, but also Chanaean cuisine as well.

Through the restaurant's decor, one could immerse themselves in a starry view, as though they could see the stars just by looking up. The experience was truly amazing, and there was a constant stream of diners coming here to dine every night.

Charlotte had reserved a seat in the morning, and upon arrival, the waiter led her and Sean inside.

The long corridor leading to the dining room was adorned with a starry sky. Despite this, the lighting seemed quite dim. Charlotte was so engrossed in the oil paintings on the wall that she didn't notice where she was going. She almost fell when she stumbled, but Sean quickly reached out to steady her.

"Be careful," Sean said.

Charlotte hummed in response, casually resting her hand on his arm. As they arrived at the table assigned by the waiter, she was caught off guard by the sight of a familiar face.

As a result, Charlotte could only remain in her seat, forcing herself not to pay attention to the couple across the hallway. She then chatted with Sean to distract herself.

Sean asked her, "Has your hair grown

Lindsay had been engrossed in her conversation with Jerry. It wasn't until she faintly heard Charlotte's voice that she realized the latter had sat across the hallway.

Chapter 1443 He Is The One In The Wrong

Charlotte pointed at Sean across the table and asked Lindsay, "Do you think the man dining with me now is worse than my ex-boyfriend?"

Without thinking, Lindsay glanced at Sean, who was sitting opposite Charlotte.

Although Lindsay was mostly involved in the social circles of the Baykeep, she was also aware of the ongoing in Jadeborough and naturally knew who he was.

She couldn't understand how a terrible woman like Charlotte always managed to snag a boyfriend who was better than the last.

Charlotte caught a glimpse of the cold expression on Jerry's face. The realization that her words angered him instantly lifted her spirits.

Clearly, it was Jerry who was in the wrong. He always threatened to break up with her, expecting her to pacify him every time.

It was one thing to have others inform her about the breakup, but what followed was even more shocking. She had exposed details about Lindsay and caused Jerry to step in to defend her. He even posted online that both of them were dating, claiming that he never had a girlfriend before.

Charlotte had simply not seen a man more despicable than Jerry.

Ignoring Lindsay, Charlotte turned back to continue her conversation with Sean. They chatted away, lost in their own world of joy.

However, Lindsay couldn't swallow her pride after being insulted by Charlotte.

After finishing their meal, the two left the restaurant together.

Sean asked Charlotte if she wanted to ride the Ferris wheel. Charlotte confessed her fear of heights and expressed her reluctance to return to her desolate apartment. She asked Sean to take her to Jessica's place instead.

Upon arrival, Sean got out of the car to open the door for Charlotte and took out a bouquet of irises from the trunk.

He hadn't had the time to take it out of the car before.

Sean handed the irises to Charlotte along with the ring box. "I'm sure my intentions are clear given the fact that I agreed to dine with you."

"I just wanted to thank you by treating you to a meal," said Charlotte.

Sean smiled without exposing her thoughts. He raised his hand to adjust her crooked jersey hat. "If you're thinking about dating again, do consider me first."

Charlotte's grudge against the Gaudette family was something he was aware of. He also knew what she intended to do when they ran into each other at the hotel entrance a month ago.

“Jess, I really didn't do anything,” Charlotte said. “After Sean saved me last time, I didn't have the chance to thank him. What's wrong with inviting him out for a meal?”

She paused for a moment before continuing, “Didn't you ask me to find someone from the Gaudette family? He's quite eligible and is in a position of power.”

Jessica's lips moved slightly in an attempt to speak when Charlotte cut her off. “Mary's house is situated close to my condominium. I'll have Sasha stay with me for a while.”

She knew that Jessica was a suspicious person. If she stayed there for the night, the latter would nag her again after a while.

In pursuit of some peace and quiet, Charlotte helped Sasha pack a few sets of clothes. She quickly stowed the living room toys into a box, then hopped in the car and drove back to her own condominium right away.

Sasha looked around the condominium. "Is Uncle Jerry not here?"

"He's not around. We broke up," Charlotte said as she opened the refrigerator, took out a bottle of milk, poured a cup, and put it in the microwave to heat up.

Sasha immediately said, "Just as expected. Your bad temper must have driven him away, Aunt Charlotte."

"He broke up with me, not the other way around. Don't slander me," Charlotte said, pinching her niece's chubby cheeks. She then picked the latter up and carried her to the bedroom for a bath.

By the time Charlotte finished washing up and came out of her bedroom, Mary had already come over and prepared breakfast.

The New Year was fast approaching, and Charlotte still had a lot to do. Unable to stay at home with Sasha, she left her in Mary's care before heading out after breakfast.

Charlotte busied herself at the office until after ten o'clock when she received an email on her phone.

The sender was a business representative from a shampoo brand. They had evaluated Scarlett and found her image to be excellent. They were interested in signing an endorsement contract with Scarlett, hence they sent an email to Charlotte to inquire about it.

Charlotte added the representative's contact to her phone and reached out to chat.

The other party had arranged a business lunch with her to discuss matters in detail. Their office was not far from Twilight Tower, so she offered to pick Charlotte up on the way. Charlotte happened to be free that afternoon and gladly agreed.

Charlotte finished packing and went downstairs, only to find the sky overcast and the wind blowing.

When the representative sent a message saying that she had arrived, Charlotte looked up to see a black Volkswagen slowly pulling up at the side of the road. She braved the wind and strode briskly over.

“What kind of death are you suggesting? Gang raping me before posting the photos?” Charlotte laughed coldly. “Are you unaware of my reputation in Jadeborough? The number of men I've slept with is more than the number of men you can ever find.

“Go ahead and post the photos you took. Do you think I'd be scared?” she went on, “But if you really do this, you're the one who's finished.”

She had dealt with Brody before. He was the type to bully the weak and fear the strong. Any hint of fear one showed would become his leverage, only encouraging him to push further.

One had to be tougher than him to intimidate him.

When Brody didn't respond immediately, Charlotte knew her words had had an impact.

“My family may be bankrupt, but I still have my brother and sister. My father and Mr. Jenson have a deep relationship, and Mr. Jenson treats me like his own daughter. If anything happens to me, they will surely come looking for you,” Charlotte said, “Mr. Lohan, you're just after money and power. Do you think it's worth it to risk your life just to get back at me?”

Brody glared fiercely at the woman in the car.

He planned to find a few men to rape Charlotte and take videos and photos of her to spread around, aiming to ruin Charlotte's future. But the young woman was sharp-tongued, and every word she spoke struck terror in his heart.

If Charlotte didn't have a good relationship with Timothy, her elder brother and second elder sister wouldn't have become executives at Forlisle Medical.

Just after participating in a brand event, Jerry was removing his makeup in the dressing room when the phone on the table suddenly lit up.

The call came from an unfamiliar number.

Jerry lowered his gaze to his phone, only picking it up to answer after a few seconds. From the other end of the call, a child's voice stuttered out, "Uncle Jerry."

Jerry immediately rose from his chair, "Sasha, why are you crying?"

"Mary took me out to play, but now I can't find her. I'm really scared of being all alone." Sasha sniffled.
"I don't remember Aunt Charlotte's number, but I remember yours, Uncle Jerry. Uncle Jerry, can you come pick me up?"

Jerry couldn't care less if this was a trap set by Charlotte to appease him. Upon learning that the little one was alone in the mall, he hurriedly grabbed his phone and rushed out.

Just then, Joash was just coming in with a coffee, "Jerry, where are you going?"

keys, and briskly walked past him, heading out.

Her father was quite fond of Edouard Frenhofer's paintings and had collected a couple of his works. Once, when they were in Saintnam, he saw one of Edouard Frenhofer's paintings being auctioned. However, to appease Charlotte, he didn't attend the auction.

Later, when his father passed away, he asked someone to purchase that painting to bury it with his father, only to find out that bought by Zander.

Sasha also craned her little head to look at the painting. In her youthful voice, she said, "Aunt Charlotte said that one of the older members of your family likes this painting, so she bought it."

After a pause, she continued curiously, "Aunt Charlotte said you couldn't care less. Uncle Jerry, what does that mean?"

Although Sasha had started learning to read and write in kindergarten and was a smart girl, there were still many words she didn't understand.

Jerry explained to her, "It simply means 'I don't like it'."

Sasha seemed to understand and responded with an "oh." Then, she asked, "Did you have a fight with Aunt Charlotte because you didn't like the birthday gift she prepared for you?"

"No."

Charlotte had previously mentioned that the birthday gift she had prepared for him was something special and that he would definitely like it. He didn't expect it to be this.

Jerry assumed that Charlotte was still at the company, so he brought Sasha to the office to find her, not expecting that she had already left in the morning.

He then pulled out his phone and dialed Charlotte, but no one answered the call.

Unsure if Charlotte was angry with him and was intentionally not answering his calls, Jerry tried calling her using her coworkers' phones at the company. But still, no one picked up.

As time slowly passed, everyone at the film and television company left work, and yet he still couldn't get in touch with Charlotte. A thought occurred to Jerry, and he managed to get Sean's number and gave him a call.

After the call connected, Jerry asked in a deep voice, "Has she gone to find him?"

"I was actually looking forward to her inviting me out for a meal." Sean instantly understood who Jerry was referring to when he said "she." "But she hasn't reached out to me."

Then, Sean continued, "Can't you really tell that she was deliberately trying to upset you last night?"
