

For Dinner 362

Chapter 362: Doing Stupid Things

“However, you really did speed up the process of us getting together. For that, I must thank you.” Adrian Zhekova said.

Ian Morris had a complicated expression on his face.

So, he actually played a part in bringing Cindy Clarke and Adrian Zhekova together?

“I’ve never intended to hide my relationship with Cindy,” Adrian said openly.

“Cindy got where she is on her own merits, and there’s nothing to hide between us. The more you try to hide something, the more it seems like there’s something to be ashamed of, right?”

Adrian’s honest and upright attitude made Ian seem even more sneaky and lacking in openness by comparison.

Gerald Young saw the situation and hurried over, pulling Ian away to chase after Eleanor Ward.

It was better not to have a deadlock here.

Clearly, they were no match for Adrian at all.

In any aspect, they were not his opponents.

Rowena Campbell looked around and noticed that none of them had waited for her. Her eyes turned slightly red, and she felt especially wronged.

At this point, they were all only concerned about Eleanor.

Was it just because she was not as pretty as Eleanor, and her family background was not as good?

Rowena didn't want to be left behind.

Once Eleanor had apologized, Rowena quickly followed suit and apologized to Cindy and Morgan Zhekova.

However, compared to Eleanor, her apology seemed much more sincere.

Not because she truly realized her mistake.

It was because she was different from Eleanor.

Eleanor had some willful confidence in her.

Rowena, on the other hand, had none of that at all.

She was from a small town and had managed to get into Capitol Medical College through hard work.

This was a big deal in her hometown.

Not only was she going to study in the city, but she was also going to study in the Capitol.

She was the best-performing student in the history of her town.

Her town was not particularly backward, but it certainly could not be considered economically developed either.

All of her motivation to work hard came from the desire to leave her small town and make it to the big city of Belfard.

To completely change both her own life and the destiny of her future children.

In Belfard, she could meet more accomplished men and lead a better life.

She didn't want to be like the other people in her hometown who likely would never know how wonderful the outside world was and would always live an ignorant life there.

Precisely for this reason, she cherished everything she had now and tried her best to grasp even more.

She couldn't let a small incident affect her future.

She couldn't allow Adrian to hold a grudge against her over such a trivial matter.

It wasn't worth it.

That's why Rowena's apology was so sincere.

Especially in comparison to Eleanor, Rowena's attitude was much better.

So much so that there were hardly any bystanders gossiping about her anymore.

After apologizing, Rowena hurried in the direction Ian and the others had left in.

She didn't know where Eleanor had gone.

She called Gerald Young and found out they were at another restaurant.

A restaurant not owned by Pingla Corp.

Although they had already booked a table at Fuellero.

But they had just encountered Adrian and lost face so badly.

Going to eat at a restaurant owned by Adrian now would be just too much for Eleanor and the others to bear.

So, they chose a random restaurant in the shopping mall that had nothing to do with Adrian.

When Rowena found them and sat down, she couldn't help but complain, "You all just left me behind! It's too much to leave me alone there!"

Gerald Young explained, "I was worried to leave Eleanor alone, didn't I?"
