

For Dinner 364

Chapter 364: The Advantage of Being Young

“Cindy Clarke didn’t explain everything... she wanted to watch me make a fool of myself, didn’t she? And you? Why didn’t you explain?” Eleanor Ward looked at Ian Morris, feeling a pang of disappointment. Her admiration for him seemed to have faded.

“I...I didn’t think of it at the time,” Ian Morris said uneasily.

“Huh!” Eleanor Ward scoffed. “You didn’t think of it, or did you do it on purpose?”

“What are you getting at?” Ian Morris asked, frowning at her.

“You were rejected by Cindy Clarke, and now she doesn’t appreciate you. She has a better boyfriend now.” Eleanor recalled, “Oh, right. When I was mistakenly criticizing Cindy’s boyfriend for being incompetent, you didn’t say a word. You just let me make an even bigger fool of myself.”

Mocking Adrian Zhekova for being incompetent?

She must be the first!

She had Ian Morris to thank for that.

Because of him, she had done something that no one else had done or dared to do.

Eleanor thought sarcastically that she could brag about this from now on.

“Because Cindy Clarke rejected you, you didn’t say anything when I was mocking her. You were just standing there watching, wanting to see her humiliated, wanting to see her in a bind, wanting revenge on her,” Eleanor said coldly.

“What are you talking about!” Ian Morris retorted immediately. “I’m not that childish!”

Eleanor didn’t believe him at all. “But you used me in your revenge plot against Cindy Clarke, dragging me into it.”

“Ian Morris, Cindy was right. You really are spineless. No wonder she looks down on you!”

“Enough!” Ian Morris rebuked her. “Don’t pin your faults on me. You’re the one who easily looks down on people. You said those words, not me. If it were not for your disdain for others, how would you have become a laughingstock?”

“If you weren’t so condescending, would all this subsequent drama have occurred? How dare you blame it on me?” Ian Morris insisted that he wasn’t the person Eleanor was portraying.

He was not that despicable!

Rowena Campbell was dumbstruck.

Her annoyance faded as she watched the drama unfold.

Ian Morris and Eleanor Ward, who always seemed to be at each other’s throats, were now actually arguing.

Eleanor, who was usually dismissive of everyone else and not polite at all, always showed a good temperament towards Ian Morris, not saying that she was completely obedient, but almost.

But now she was quarreling with him.

Rowena immediately burst into laughter.

How Ian Morris and Eleanor Ward broke off their relationship and whether they would reconcile in the future were things Cindy Clarke and Adrian Zhekova didn't care about.

Adrian originally considered Ian Morris as a love rival.

Although Ian Morris wasn't as outstanding as him in many aspects, Adrian had to admit that Ian had the advantage of youth.

Now was the time when young boys ruled.

Even when it came to chasing stars, those girls started to chase young actors. They were no longer interested in older men.

All these 20-something girls were calling themselves "mom fans".

It was clear how popular these young boys were.

With his youthful and radiant look, Ian Morris was exactly that popular young boy.

And he was the same age as Cindy.

The thing Adrian worried about most right now was not anything else, but Cindy being put off by his age.

So, Adrian was still a bit wary of Ian Morris.

Who would have thought that Ian Morris would behave like that, showing such lack of responsibility.

Cindy Clarke certainly didn't have a good impression of Ian Morris now.

However, Cindy and Ian weren't really close, even though they went to high school together, they didn't really interact much.

Therefore, whether Ian Morris was good or bad, had nothing to do with Cindy, and she didn't really care.
