

Chapter 44 To find him

It has been raining for days.

When Julia left, she visited her parents once more. Now she wants to live for herself, to go where she wants to go, to find Dave!

Julia bought the boat ticket and left.

The rain stopped and the sun slowly rose at the end of the coast.

Julia looked at the sunrise, and the bottom of her eyes was hidden with stars.

The sky was clear.

Two years later, the UK.

A special international school.

The deaf girl on the stage was playing the most beautiful music with her own hands, and Julia was looking at her nervously off stage, her gazes giving her encouragement.

A piece of Beethoven's Moonlight was performed perfectly.

The room was filled with applause.

The girl bowed gracefully; her eyes were covered with hope.

Julia also applauded, truly happy for her.

Once, she also stood on the stage, now her hands are not suitable for long hours of playing and she can only teach her students.

But even so, she was happy.

Jeremy, a male teacher at the same school, held a large bouquet and handed them to Julia.

"Congratulations, Ms. Smith, for winning first place in this competition."

"Thank you, but the flowers should be given to that child," Julia said.

Jeremy listened and the corners of his mouth rose slightly: "When can I get the chance to ask you out?"

Julia looked at his sincere gaze without any impurities, but he was not the one.

"Sorry, I have a fiancé," Julia said.

Jeremy was surprised, Julia came here for more than half a year, and he never saw any male around her.

"Who is he? Where is he?" He couldn't resist asking.

Julia gently rubbed the diamond ring on her ring finger, "I'm still looking for him, he's a wonderful lawyer named Dave, if you know anything about him, please let me know."

She searched for him for two years, and in those two years, she went to several countries that he had previously mentioned, yet she was unable to find him.

He's a lawyer, and hiding from people is kind of his specialty, she thought.

Jeremy listened and nodded, "Then I wish you could find him soon."

He was curious as to who could be so lucky to be sought by her.

Only Julia knows how much she owes Dave.

She didn't like the idea of Dave telling all her previous stories in court, but when he decided to drop the case, she knew he had always had her own best interests at his heart.

Just then, her sister's phone call came.

"Silly girl, do you know who I saw today at the old house?"

Julia's eyes moistened: "Dave?"

"Yes, that's him, and he's actually becoming a legal aid counsel now."

Julia felt her heart was about to jump out. She had searched for him for so long, but it turned out that he went to his hometown.

She cried out of joy and bought a ticket back home in a hurry before she could celebrate.

Dave, wait for me, I will come back to you immediately, this time you can't run away.

In a small county, Dave and his assistant received an old man.

"Mr. Lawyer, please, help me, that's my retirement money, I didn't think he was a fraud."

Dave patiently reassured him, "Take your time."

"It's like this..." The old man recalled the experience of being cheated at first, full of tears.

Dave heard him and said "Grandpa, don't worry, I will help you recover this money."

When the old man heard that, he was about to bow to Dave. Dave hastily stood up and helped him up with his assistant: "You are welcome, I will walk you out."

He sent the old man out of his office, only to see a petite figure standing at the door not far away. His heart thumped, and it was as if the love hidden deep in his heart had been awakened once again.
