Chapter 3 Pregnancy After Divorce

Kingston and Krista had no feelings for each other. The reason why they got married was Kingston's mother was sandwiched between him and his grandmother, which put her in a dilemma.

He had no choice but to marry Krista for the sake of his mother, and therefore, the relationship between his mother and his grandmother had eased.

Now, his grandmother was in poor health, and she didn't have the chance to plot against his mother secretly. He wanted to find that girl and marry her, so he had to divorce Krista.

Krista was a young student, and had been hiding her marriage from the public. Their divorce would have no effect on her life.

After the divorce, she would receive a large sum of money, enough for her to spend the rest of her life.

Moreover, Kingston knew she did not like him.

This was the second time they had met. Who would like someone who had only met twice?

Hearing what Kingston said, Krista felt her heart sink.

As expected, Kingston liked someone else.

Then there was no need for her to tell him that she slept with him that night, or he would be annoyed.

She went abroad to find evidence of Kingston's cheating, so that she could divorce him. Now, she got what she wanted.

"Alright, I agree." Krista didn't hesitate.

Kingston had done everything possible to make up for her. He was not to blame for what happened that night as he couldn't control himself. He might be annoyed about it.

Krista took the signature pen and signed her name.

“Thank you.” Kingston thanked Krista for her resolution. They divorced amicably.

After dinner, Kingston did not stay. He left.

Krista packed her things that night. Kingston’s car came to pick her up the next day.

She looked back at the villa she had lived in for a year.

She quietly came one year ago.

Now, she quietly left.

After a year, she became a divorced woman.

And she lost her virginity.

With the divorce certificate in her hand, she was in a trance in the sun.

The secretary stopped the car in front of her.

Kingston rolled the window down and looked at her calmly. “I’ll give you a ride,” he offered.

“No need. I’ll go back by taxi. Thank you for taking care of me this year.” Krista gave him a relaxed smile.

Kingston gave her so much money. It was not a big deal to sleep with him once.

Kingston did not force her. He nodded and left.

Krista stood at the entrance of the Civil Affairs Bureau and waited for a taxi.

It was autumn now, but it was still very hot.

It was just over ten o’clock, but the sun was blazing hot and Krista could hardly open her eyes.

The Civil Affairs Bureau was remotely located, so it was difficult to hail a taxi.

Krista was covered in sweat. After standing there for a long time, she felt dizzy.

The things in front of her gradually blurred. She had a blackout and couldn’t see anything.

When she came to herself, she found she was in hospital. A kind person sent her there.

"... What happened to me?"

"You suffered from heatstroke, but you are alright now. As a pregnant woman, you should take good care of yourself. Fortunately, the baby is very healthy. You can be discharged from the hospital after a short rest."

"What... What did you say?"

Krista's heart was thumping as she grabbed the nurse's hand.

"You suffered from heatstroke."

"Not this sentence. Pregnant woman? You said I am a pregnant woman?"

"Don't you know that you're pregnant? You've been pregnant for three months, but you have no idea of it?"

Krista got a shock.

She didn't menstruate regularly, so she didn't care about it.

She took a contraceptive pill that night. How could she get pregnant?

"It's impossible. I can't be pregnant. I took a contraceptive pill!"

"Even a powerful contraceptive pill leaves a 3% chance of conceiving. No contraception guarantee absolute success," the nurse reminded.

Krista fainted again.
