

Feel the Way You Feel, My Love Chapter 639

“Did he do anything to you?” Shane asked.

Natalie felt a sense of guilt, recalling the scene where Sean pinned her down on the couch. She lowered her head, hoping she sounded nonchalant when she replied, “No.”

It was difficult to talk about Sean’s evil misconduct towards her.

Her plan would fail if Shane confronted Sean.

Shane couldn’t see her expression, so he was oblivious to her omission. “That’s good then. Have you told him?”

“Yes, I did, and it seems he believed it. I guess he will be heading to Loang next,” Natalie replied sombrely.

Shane pressed his lips into a thin line. “All right. Leave the rest to me. I’ll make sure he won’t be returning to J City once he left.”

That night, Shane listed out the possible hiding places for the will and had Silas searched them. Nevertheless, they still couldn’t find it.

So he had Natalie lie to Sean to lure the latter out of J City. Then, Sam would have no protection, leaving him open to his attacks.

Shane tightened his grip on his phone and exuded a dangerous aura as he thought about what Sam had done to him.

Natalie caught Shane’s change of mood despite not looking at him. “Shane, are you okay?”

“I’m fine.” Shane’s eyes glinted and collected himself.

Natalie nodded. “That’s good. I’ll be hanging up then.”

“Sure.” Shane nodded.

Natalie placed her phone in the passenger seat as she continued driving towards the company.

Upon arriving, Joyce waved at her. “Nat, Lina’s here.”

Natalie smiled. “Got it.”

Throughout this fortnight, Lina had been coming to the company every two days. Now, Natalie and Joyce were close friends with her.

“Lina!” Natalie greeted as she entered her office.

Lina turned her head from her blueprint to look at Natalie. “You’re finally here. Come over here.”

“What’s wrong?” Natalie approached curiously.

Lina set the blueprint on the table. “This is the blueprint. There’s something weird about it that I couldn’t point out. Please help me take a look.”

Natalie narrowed her eyes as she studied the necklace blueprint. “Indeed, there’s something weird with it.”

“Right?” Lina bit her lip. “How could this be? I’m confident about my designs. So I have no idea how I could design such an awkward blueprint. Hurry, help me look for the weird part.”

Natalie chuckled, “You’re the designer. If you don’t know, how would I?”

"I couldn't find it because I'm the designer. You might see it with a fresh pair of eyes." Lina passed the blueprint to Natalie.

Without a choice, Natalie took the blueprint and sat behind her desk.

As she studied it intently, the creases on her forehead deepened.

Realizing something, she dug through her drawer and found the gown blueprint.

Upon scrutiny, the gown's and the jewelry's blueprint were strikingly compatible. A glance at both of the designs, and one would assume they were a set.

"I got it." Natalie compared it with her gown's blueprint and finally understood the awkwardness in Lina's design.

Lina was instantly by her side. "Where is the problem?"

"Here." Natalie pointed at her's and Natalie's blueprint. "Haven't we discussed earlier that it would be two different designs? So why is yours so similar to mine?"

Lina finally noticed the flaw. She palmed her forehead, upset by herself. "I forgot that we did agree to have two different designs. But as I drew, it turned out this way."

Natalie shook her head and laughed, "Alright. Hurry and change it."

"Sure." Lina nodded, then started to amend her blueprint.

Natalie took out the other four gown blueprints and reviewed them one by one.

Since she and Lina had decided on the theme for the princess, they had drawn the blueprint in ten days. All that was left was waiting for the princess' approval.

"Lina, have you contacted the princess?"

"No, I plan to contact her later," replied Lina without lifting her head.

"Alright." Natalie passed the blueprint to her.

After all, Lina is the intermediary, so it would be more appropriate for her to pass the blueprint to the princess.

After Lina finished amending, she grinned happily. "I'm such a genius."

"Hurry and send the blueprints then," Natalie chuckled.

Lina immediately snapped a few photos of the blueprint and sent them. Her phone rang after a short while.

"Excuse me, Nat. I have to take this call." Lina gestured with her phone.

Natalie nodded and gestured for Lina to take the call.

Her phone displayed the caller as Bryan. "Hi, Bryan."

"Where are you?" Bryan asked.

Lina glanced at Natalie. "I'm at my partner's. Why?"

"Nothing. I heard you have finished your blueprints?" Bryan quizzed.

Lina nodded. "Yep, they're done. I've sent them over to the princess."

"I see," Bryan acknowledged.

Lina frowned. "Bryan, is there a reason for you calling me?"

"It's nothing major. I want to inform you that the princess will be heading to your workplace tomorrow. If you have the time, please help to arrange her accommodation."

"What? The princess is coming over?" Lina's eyes widened over the surprising news.

Natalie was taken aback upon hearing it too. She glanced at her phone.

Bryan laughed, "I know. I just got the news from Mercede as well. She needs you to arrange the accommodation."

"Okay. Will do," Lina excitedly agreed.

She set her phone down once the call had ended.

Natalie clenched her fist in excitement and asked, "Is the princess coming to J City?"

"Yes, she is." Lina laughed, "That's amazing. We don't need to go to her country now. We can finish the gown and jewelry here."

Natalie was delighted over the news.

After all, going to a different country would be difficult for some.

Since it would be convenient, why not?

"But why would the princess come over all of a sudden?" Natalie pondered.

Lina shrugged her shoulder. "Who knows. Maybe it was just an impromptu trip."

"True," Natalie agreed.

"I'm leaving now, Nat. When I have a reply from the princess, I'll let you know. I need to go and arrange her accommodation." Lina waved her phone.

Natalie nodded and accompanied her to the company's entrance.

Joyce followed Natalie upon returning. "Nat, has Lina left?"

"Yes," Natalie answered.

Joyce noticed the joyous expression on Natalie's face. "You seem happy. Did anything good happen?"

"It's nothing. It's just the princess will be coming over," Natalie replied gleefully.

Joyce was stunned. "What? The princess is coming to J City?"

"Yes."

"That's great. Can you bring me along when you're going to meet the princess? I haven't met any royalty before." Joyce clung to Natalie's arm excitedly.

Natalie replied, "Sure, I can bring you along. Now, let go. I have to return to work."

"Okay, go ahead." Joyce released her arm.

Natalie returned to her office and continued with her work.

In the evening, Shane came to pick her up as usual.
