Chapter 107

“Where are you heading to now?” Jennifer asked.

Clara answered truthfully, “I’m going for a run. I’m used to doing that after I wake up.”

Jennifer said, “I’ll go on a walk with you. We can talk on our way.”

She wanted to get to the bottom of Clara’s relationship with Yohan. She also wanted to learn about Clara’s family background.

As the matriarch of the Morris family, Jennifer often attended elite parties where she would encounter many high–born ladies from prominent families in Donford City. Yet she had never met Clara.

Clara saw that Jennifer was wearing high heels, She Kindly reminded her, “Your feet might hurt walking that far in high heels, Mrs. Morris. You should just wait for Mr. Morris to come back and answer your questions. He’ll tell you if you ask him.”

Jennifer replied, “It’s fine, I’ll just rest if I’m tired. It’s my first time seeing a young woman other than Mandy in–Yohan’s house. I just wanted to have a talk with you.”

Clara stopped suggesting otherwise since Jennifer didn’t mind hurting her feet. They walked out together.

Jennifer asked while walking, “Are you from Donford City, Clara? Where do you live? Why haven’t seen you before?”

Clara smiled and replied, “I’m from Donford City. I live on Nameless Mountain in Casville. I’m just a redneck who lives worlds apart from you, Mrs. Morris. It wouldn’t be a surprise that you’ve never seen me before.”

A redneck?

Jennifer stopped walking. “What do your parents do for a living?”

Clara replied truthfully, “I don’t have parents or any other relatives. To be exact, I’m not sure if I have any relatives. I was abandoned as a baby, and my mentor took me in and raised me for the past 25 years. We only have each other. My mentor is a fortune teller.” @wW.nôV_e/woRm.c(ø)m

She revealed her family situation to Jennifer, thinking that Jennifer would have a traditional view of societal status since she was from a wealthy family. With their mismatched statuses, Jennifer would surely separate them.

Clara would be able to divorce Yohan without having to even do anything. After all, she had already done what the heavens wanted her to do.

Jennifer lost all her enthusiasm by then. She asked again, “What exactly is your relationship with Yohan, Ms. Fowler?”

She continued speaking without waiting for her answer. “I’d advise you to leave Yohan soon if you’re in a relationship with him. Yohan is the eldest son and legitimate grandson of the Morris family. He’s a young scion with a noble status. Your status and background do not match his.” wwW.no-ve!W©Řm.Com

To Jennifer, Clara’s background wasn’t even fit for her to be considered a match for Yoh she was anxious about his love life, they still couldn’t settle for just anyone.

Even though

Her eldest daughter–in–law had to be a high–born lady from a prominent family in Donford City. She had to be able to support Yohan in his business, care for him at home, and be at ease in both social gatherings and domestic duties. (w)(w)W.nOve!W_eRm.cøM

Clara chuckled, “I’m not in a relationship with Mr. Morris, Mrs. Morris. I’ll put it this way, the reason why

I’m living here is because he was urged into marriage by his grandmother, and I’m here to act as his shield.

“His grandmother will no longer pressure him for marriage with me staying here, and he will be able to have some peace.”

Clara believed that she was indeed a shield in her marriage with Yohan.

She was merely following the signs from the heavens for her flash marriage with Yohan, whereas he was just happy to get things settled.

As such, her primary role was to act as a shield for him, so that he could focus on work without having Bonnie pressure him on his marriage.

Jennifer asked, “So, you’re saying that you’re only cooperating with Yohan? He deliberately brought your back to help him deceive Bonnie?”
