

Wife 23

Chapter 23

“I’m sure you’ll still be here for a long time.”

That was the only thing Adam could say. He didn’t have the guts to diss his boss, who never dated despite being 30.

Bonnie chuckled and replied, “Everybody wishes to have a long life, but how many can realistically live to celebrate their hundredth birthday? Life is but a fleeting moment that lasts a couple of decades.”

Adam smiled. He didn’t say anything else.

He walked Bonnie to the door of the CEO’s office, knocked on it for her, and then pushed the door open.

“Go ahead and work on your assigned duties, Adam, said Bonnie sweetly before she entered the room.

Adam seemed thoughtful when he closed the door to the office. He was giving the duo inside some privacy but worried that he’d accidentally witness Bonnie reprimanding Yohan. Seeing that would get him in trouble with Yohan. @WW.no(r)m.com

“Grandma”

Yohan got up to welcome Bonnie.

Bonnie ignored him, went to the couch, and sat down.

Yohan noticed that his grandmother looked off and found that to be strange.

“Grandma, what is it this time?”

When it came to dealing with the elderly lady in front of him, Yohan could only compromise. He was the eldest grandson, and his grandparents loved him the most.

While Yohan wasn’t close to his parents, his bond with his grandparents was extremely strong. Hence, he always listened to them.

“Come here and sit beside me.”

Yohan obeyed and sat down.

The second he did that, Bonnie pinched his face. As she did so, she complained, “Why do you always look so grumpy? Are you in a competition to see who is more stoic? You’re already the most stoic person in the entire city, so stop this already! www.No(r)m.com

“Anyone would think that you are unapproachable and difficult to love. They’d feel like they’d die of frostbite if they get close to you.”

Yohan was speechless for a moment there, but he later said, “Grandma, that’s just how I am. I was born.

this way.”

Although his face was pinched, the all–powerful Yohan Morris didn’t fight back, Bonnie wasn’t pinching that hard, though. At worst, it’d redden Yohan’s face for a while. He’d recover soon after.

“Who complained to you about me?”

“Your wife.”

Yohan was taken aback. He asked, “You went to look for her?”

Bonnie replied, “No, I told you I won’t look into her. She is your wife. If you want to know what kind of a person she is, you have to figure it out yourself.

“I simply saw her near the building. She had her car parked at the side of the road and was in a daze. I recognized her, so I got out of the car to chat with her, “Don’t worry, I didn’t tell her I am your grandmother.

Yohan had to compliment his grandmother. He said, “Your eyesight truly is amazing.”

However, he couldn’t help but complain internally about how Bonnie recognized Clara with just a glance through the car’s window.

“She’s my first granddaughter–in–law, so it’s only natural that I memorize what she looks like. She asked for a divorce, didn’t she? Hah! Serves you right. Even feel like laughing at you for being so disliked that your wife is demanding a divorce after only one day of marriage.”

Yohan scowled right away.

“She told you about something this private?” Yohan asked, assuming Clara was the kind of person who couldn’t keep secrets.

That got Yohan to begin disliking Clara.

“I told her that sometimes a stranger’s advice would be better than that of someone close to her. She looked very upset, so I offered to listen and help her. Your grandma looks so sweet and harmless that she couldn’t resist sharing her problems with me. What’s wrong with that?

“If were born with a scowl like yours, she would have gotten into the car, stepped on the gas, and fled. There’s no way she’d talk to me.”

“Loudmouth.”

Bonnie had released Yohan from her pinch. However, when she heard Yohan calling Clara a loudmouth, she swung her hand to his lips. Naturally, Bonnie didn’t hit Yohan hard.
