

Game of Destiny – A Thrilling Tale of Power, Love & Fate

Chapter 109-2

Chapter 109-2

“Everyone I have talked to is willing to offer up space in their pack, Sam told us. The others said the same.

“Everyone is horrified when we tell them what is happening in the ean Shore pack,” Medow said.

“No one wants to believe it,” Shelly agreed.

“The council will help us organise the work of giving people a safe place to go to. We have one more call to make and then we will talk to the pack,” Finlay said. When we were alone again I took out my phone and called my brother. I put it on speaker.

“Hi Amie, how are things?” Elder answered.

“Hi. You know me, always in the middle of something. I have Finn with me.”

“Hello,” Finlay said.

“Hi. I get the feeling this isn’t a social call,” Elder told us.

“No, you are right,” I confessed and told him what was happening. When I was done there was a long pause.

“Are you serious?” my brother asked.

“I am.”

“I will talk to James, but I can’t see us refusing to help. Not in a case like this,” he told me.

“Thank you,” Finlay said.

“Are we looking into some sort of preventive action?” Elder asked. Finlay chuckled.

“That was a nice way of asking if I intend to take over my brother’s pack. No, not at this moment.”

“Good to know. I will get back to you as soon as I talk to my Alpha, m heading over to meet him as we speak.”

“Thank you, Elder. Take care and say hi to everyone from us,” I said and we ended the call.

“I was looking forward to a dramafree winter,” Finlay told me.

“We will get there,” I promised him. It didn’t take my brother more than ten minutes to message me back saying they would accept anyone who needed a safe place to stay. I smiled at the message. Even if packs may have differences and be at odds with each other, when it really mattered, we put it to the side to make sure we took care of those who needed it.

“Time to tell the pack,” Finlay told me. I nodded. When we told the pack there were a lot of worried faces looking back at us.

“We and other packs are ready to shelter any wolves who need it. There is a list of packs who are willing to help that is being sent to everyone as we speak along with contact information for each of them. When you speak with your loved ones, please let them know they will have a place to go if they leave. The council will also help. Just remind them they are not alone,” I told the pack. We ended the meeting, but stayed to let members come up and talk to us.

“I will reach out to your mother,” Matilda told Finlay.

“Thank you. I would call, but I think she is more likely to answer your call than mine,” he said. Matilda gave him a sad smile, but didn’t object. I put my arm around him to make sure he didn’t feel alone.

It’s okay, sweetheart, he min@linked me..

‘I know. We continued to talk to other members, most of them had someone they left behind in the old pack. A couple of hours later, my mom called me.

“We heard what is going on. How are things?” she asked. We

Te sling on the back porch, relaxing.

“It’s a little tense. We still have a lot of connections to Ocean Shore I said.

“I can understand that. The Alpha has told our pack we will offer anyone who wishes a place with us,” she told me.

“We appreciate it. We are far away from the pack and not everyone will feel comfortable seeking shelter with us due to the history between the packs.”

“Yes, I can see how it would give some pause. I’m happy James put his hurt feelings to the side for the greater good. He is a good Alpha when he’s not being a stubborn mule,” my mother said. I smiled.

“He is. It’s his redeeming quality,” I agreed. Finlay huffed and pulled me closer. My mom heard it and laughed.

“You are sure you are doing okay in all of this?” she asked.

“We are doing fine. We take solace and support in each other,” I said.

“As you should. I will let you get back to your evening. I just wanted to check up on both of you. Give my love to your mate and remember to call,” she said.

“I will. Give dad a hug from me.”
