got me Amie back. Most of all I wanted kill my brother. I knew he was behind was ready to kill someone, anyone, as long as all of this, I had known it from the moment Jonas and I wondered what took so long in the bathroom and tried to mindlinked our mates. And failed. The panic I felt in that moment surpassed anything I had experienced before. Barging into the women’s bathroom to find Beatrice out cold on the floor and not a trace of Amie had set my world spinning. The roar that had been torn from my chest had the windows shaking and the council’s warriors flocking to the bathroom. As Jonas had tried to wake his mate, I had done my best not to destroy the bathroom or shift into my wolf. Amie needed me and I couldn’t, turn into a mindless beast. As the head of the council had understood the situation, one luna injured and one missing, he had mobilised every resource the council had to find Amie. Elder had not left my side since he learned what had happened. All our allies had offered their support, but what could they do? We were all here without warriors. Luckily, the council had heirs. A virtual army was put in my hands to direct as I pleased. I just didn’t know what to do with them. I had no idea where Amie was. When she mindlinked me after two hours, it was like pulling in air into my lungs after being underwater.

“I need to know every building within a two–hour radius of this hotel!” I demanded in the conference room that had become the command centre in the search for my mate.

“Yes, Alpha,” someone called back.

“Amie?” Elder asked. I nodded as I was occupied with mindlinking her.

“She is mindlinking me,” I told him. His relief was visible.

“Finlay, over here,” James called out. He stood at a large monitor. As I walked over to it, I saw it was a map over the area with the hotel in the centre.

“There are five buildings you can get to within two hours,” a warrior explained and five dots showed up on the map. “Four of them are guest cabins the hotel guests can rent to go glamping. The last one is a warehouse,” he explained.

“Not the cabins. Amie said the room was made of concrete,” I told them.

“That rules out the warehouse as well, it is made of corrugated metal,” the warrior said.

“What? But that leaves us with nothing?” I said. Amie had confirmed the one who had taken her was my brother and she had asked, me to stay away. Fat chance of that ever happening. I would get her and our pup to safety. I would leave her for a couple of minutes with Elder while I killed my brother and then we would go back home and she would never leave our pack land ever again. The last part was maybe something we needed to talk about, and I was almost certain I would lose the argument, but I would do my best to win. I just needed to find her. It hit me in an instant and I felt like an idiot.

‘Amie, tell me if you can hear this,’ I mindlinked her. Then I channelled all my wolf’s fear, panic and frustration and let out another roar.

“Alpha, please, you will trigger all the alphas in this hotel and that would be bad,” the head of the council told me.

‘That was one mighty roar, love. I think Karo just wet his pants,’ Amie linked back.

“She is still in the hotel!” I shouted,

“What?” Elder said.

“But I can’t scent her,” James objected. I didn’t even bother to growl at him for trying to scent my mate out, because he was right. We had all tried to get a trace of Amie to follow and since we didn’t get one, we had assumed she had been taken from the hotel. At least I wasn’t the only idiot.

“Does the hotel have windowless rooms?” I asked the head of the council,

“Yes, we have storage rooms in the basement which have no window” he said. Basement it was, I sprinted towards the dont

“Finlay!” I heard Elder and James call out as one. Before I could read the door, it was blocked by Alpha bars.

“Get out of the way or I will tear your head off your shoulders,” I growled.
