

The Godsend Trio – My Terrible yet Heartwarming CEO Husband

Chapter 124

Chapter 124 She Was Most Probably Well

At Ryzan's Central Hospital.

Cathy sat on the chair and looked at the several specialists in front of her.

"Cathy, you don't have to be nervous."

Yoel chuckled. He was seated in the middle of a group of experts.

"These are the most prominent psychiatrists in Ryzan."

"This one specially flew back from abroad yesterday. He is an expert in a famous foreign psychiatric surgery institute and has won a global award before."

"This one has been an expert in the psychiatric field for more than forty years. He can identify the symptoms from a glance for ordinary patients."

"This one is even more notable. This is Ryzan's youngest psychiatric researcher, Dr. Uriel. He is only thirty years old."

"He just received offers from several big hospitals around the world last week."

Yoel looked at Cathy and spoke earnestly. "Look! So many experts are here for a consultation with you. You must relax!"

Cathy: "..."

She silently glanced at the few respected doctors in front of her.

She became even more nervous after Yoel's introduction.

The woman pursed her lips. Her lips trembled as she spoke, "Hello, experts."

"Hello."

The leading old specialist pushed the bridge of his glasses on his nose and said, "Let's start."

Cathy took a deep breath. "Well then."

She thought that the experts would ask her many tough questions during this consultation.

But they were exceptionally gentle with her.

They would ask her about the details of her daily life. Her opinions and plans for society, family, love, affection, and career.

At first, Cathy was very nervous. But she gradually got to relax and started chatting with the experts more cheerfully.

Finally, Uriel, the youngest doctor glanced at Cathy's face and asked her a very sharp question.

"Was what you did with your ex-boyfriend five years ago the most regretful thing you've done in your life?"

Cathy bit her lip and nodded.

"Can you elaborate more about it?"

"What makes you feel that you shouldn't have done it? Which part do you regret and does it impact you now?"

Cathy raised her eyes and looked at Uriel. "Dr. Uriel, must I talk about this?"

"We are psychiatrists."

Dr. Hyde shrugged. With a faint smile on his lips, he said, "There is nothing you can hide from a psychiatrist."

Cathy took a deep breath and looked at Yoel, who was sitting at the side.

She hesitated for a moment, but finally spoke quietly.

"I gave birth to a child for someone else."

This sentence instantly silenced the four men who were present.

The three experts, as well as Yoel, had the 'stun' word written all over their faces.

Cathy clenched her fists tightly by her side.

She looked at them and said, "Do you want me to go on?"

Dr. Hyde glanced at the three men beside him and squinted. "Do you hate the person you were at that time?"

"If you were given another chance to decide, would you change your mind?"

Cathy shook her head.

"I don't hate myself. I won't change my mind either."

"I was in love with Xavier at that time. I could do anything for him."

"I was young, ignorant, and blind at that time."

"I would do my best, no matter if it was good or bad, to help Xavier."

"The only regret I have now was being too foolish at that time."

"If I were to turn back time, I might make the same decision."

"This is what I've experienced in life. Regret cannot change anything."

The woman's words brought the three experts present to silence.

After a long while, the leading expert pushed his glasses to the bridge of his nose and said, "Cathy, you live boldly!"

Yoel quickly stood up and confirmed, "So you mean that Cathy's mental state is..."

"She is absolutely mentally fit."

Uriel narrowed his eyes and glanced at Cathy's face. "Not only is she well now, she most probably wasn't even mentally unfit before this."

Yoel was startled. "What do you mean?"

Uriel lowered his head and tidied up his documents. He continued in a light voice. "If we analyzed it according to her time of discharge and hospitalization records, she experienced a mental breakdown after giving birth to a child."

"This coincides with the time she lost her memory."

Yoel pursed his lips. "But..."

"You must know that there is always a clear inducement factor for a person to mentally breakdown."

"It seems that Cathy, who was sick five years ago, did not carry any inducement factor to breakdown. She was full of hope for the future."

"She knew that the child did not belong to her. Although she was reluctant to give up the child, she hoped that the child will help her solve her problem."

"She wanted to do something for her boyfriend, and was looking forward to a better life."

"I did not find any reason that would make her get out of control or even emotionally unstable."

After speaking, Uriel raised his eyes and glanced at the other two experts. "What do the both of you think?"

The two experts also shook their heads. "Although people get mentally ill for many reasons."

"But a positive person like Madam Shaw would not experience mental breakdown if it wasn't for a major blow in life and an emotional breakdown."

"Moreover, she looks calm and cheerful now. She does not seem to have shadows from her past illness."

The results from the consultation of the three experts made Yoel frown hard.

He thought that Cathy's mental state was fine now but he had never thought that the experts would deny Cathy's past mental illness.

But if Cathy did not get sick five years ago, why did she have those photos and diagnostic records?

"It could be fake."

Uriel explained Yoel's doubts with a faint smile. "She looked crazy in the photos you saw."

"However, you can't be sure that she was crazy just by looking at the way she struggled and cried."

"What if she was crying because she didn't want to stay in a mental hospital?"

"What if she just didn't want anyone to touch her because she was unhappy?"

"Everything is possible."

Uriel handed Cathy's mental fitness certificate to Yoel, then turned around and took out his business card from his bag. He gave one to Yoel and another to Cathy. "If you need any help in investigating what happened five years ago, I'm willing to offer a hand."

"I too would like to know who could be so bold in Ryzan to put a normal person into a mental hospital."

After he finished speaking, he turned to leave.

Cathy stared at the business card in her hand.

Yoel frowned. "Cathy..."

"After all, you're still young."

The two old experts at the side sighed lightly. "We were also jealous when we were young."

"But we couldn't care much anymore now that we are old."

"Of course, our diagnosis might not be necessarily accurate. You could have gone crazy without any symptoms at that time. It could be possible."

"But..."

The old man looked into Cathy's eyes and said solemnly. "I think you should look into it. Find the doctor and the nurses who treated you back then and get the truth."

"After all, having a medical record of mental illness may cause a lot of unnecessary misunderstandings for you in the future."

The other expert sighed. "But I feel that something is fishy because you had amnesia right after you got crazy. Perhaps someone is trying to cover something up."

Cathy bit her lip and glanced at the two old men. She trembled anxiously. "But... I do not hold any secrets for someone to treat me like this..."

If there was any, it could only be the child that she was carrying at that time.
