

Good Things Come in Pairs Chapter 14

Chapter 14 She's Gorgeous

- He was worried that if he didn't, he might make an expression that would get him killed.
- Madeline was speechless as well. Those who didn't know her would think she was weak at first glance, but she couldn't believe that Sebastian would say something like that even after he fought her. Does he think everyone who loses to him is frail? Well, in that case, then I am frail, since I lost to him. Wait. This isn't something I should dwell on. She turned around and looked at him seriously. "The boys are my kids, not yours. I don't care if you're their real father or not, they're mine and mine alone."
- "I understand." Sebastian smiled. "They're your whole world, and I won't take them away from you. I'm not a common thug."
- She had been there for the kids ever since they were born, and she had been pouring her heart and soul out to them for five years. I'd have to be pretty scummy to take them away and break them up. Hmm, but I can take all of them with me. That way, they won't be broken up.
- Madeline looked at him calmly, but she couldn't find any traces of a lie. He was really handsome; possibly the most handsome man she had ever met. But besides that, he had a noble and elegant air about him. One look and she knew he was no ordinary man.
- He was as elegant as a prince and as majestic as a king. People would naturally trust his words and actions, and that included Madeline. She heaved a sigh of relief secretly and smiled at him. "Thank you."
- She was gorgeous, and her smile looked like a sea of blooming flowers. It even attracted Sebastian, who had seen countless beauties throughout the years. His smile broadened. "No problem." He looked at the Taylors, who were writhing and screaming on the ground. "Take the kids and leave. I'll handle the rest." So you called my sons b*stards? You're going to pay a heavy price, or you're not coming out of jail that easily.
- She nodded and thanked him again before she led the kids to her red Cayenne.
- Just before they reached the car, Buddy, who had his hand held by his mother, suddenly turned around and looked at Sebastian.
- Sebastian was seeing them off, and he smiled gently at the boy.
- Quinton had just finished his call. He turned around, and the first thing he saw was Sebastian's smile. His hand trembled, and his phone almost fell to the ground. Holy sh*t. Master Sebastian is actually smiling that gently? What is this? Some sort of illusion? Man, I want to take a photo, but he might kill me, so I'd better not. He's not this gentle to everyone after all.
- Buddy saw Sebastian smiling at him. He suddenly smooched his little hand and pushed it toward Sebastian. Obviously, that was a flying kiss.
- That melted Sebastian's heart. He's so adorable. For some reason, he was seized by an urge to take the boys home with him. I don't care even if they're not my sons.