Francis lifted his head, his expression calm but inquisitive. "What? What about the Universe Group has suddenly made them so appealing for collaboration?"

Franklin offered a hesitant smile and responded, "You've been tied up with the overseas markets and might not be aware of the local buzz. The Universe Group has recently launched a project that's become a massive hit, drawing interest from various quarters."

A hint of surprise crossed Francis's face as he leaned forward, curiosity piqued. "What project could possibly garner such attention from major corporations, without any investors?"

Franklin quickly produced the documents detailing the theme park that had captured public imagination.

After digesting the information, Francis allowed a slow smile. "It appears I've underestimated Loraine."

For someone of his stature, merely issuing a warning was a significant gesture meant to defend his family's honor. Normally, he wouldn't consider someone as young as Loraine a true competitor.

However, her recent success had changed his perspective. She wasn't just another affluent heir in his view anymore.

A sudden thought struck him, and he asked, "Does the Universe Group really have such cutting-edge holographic technology? I've heard nothing of it."

Commented [Ma1]:

"The project is a joint venture with the Solar Company. They supply both the holographic and AI technologies." Franklin clarified.

Francis's interest faded as quickly as it had appeared, replaced by a scowl. "It seems she's merely riding on the coattails of others, without any real merit of her own."

Still, the details Franklin shared piqued his curiosity about the theme park. "Try to secure a ticket for me. I want to see if it lives up to the hype."

Franklin's smile was strained. "That might be difficult. It's well-known online how challenging it is to get tickets. I've been attempting to secure one for myself and my girlfriend for over a week without success..."

Francis's frown deepened. Although he was not well-versed in online matters, Franklin's comments had given him a sense of the theme park's popularity.

Driven by curiosity, he eventually used his connections to purchase a ticket at a premium price.

Dressed in casual attire, Francis visited the theme park discreetly, prepared to scrutinize every detail.

He had initially believed the park's popularity stemmed only from its use of holographic projection and AI technologies provided by the Solar Company, dismissing it as a mere gimmick that masked an otherwise mundane amusement park.

However, as he immersed himself in the theme park's experiences, his perspective shifted dramatically.

While ordinary visitors might be drawn by the novelty of the technology, those with a keen eye for design could appreciate the deeper complexities.

The advanced technologies were impressive, but they merely complemented the true allure of the theme park: its architectural design and planning.

Having studied design in his younger years, Francis had not seen such innovative designs in recent times. Impressed, he called Franklin over and asked, "Who is responsible for designing this theme park?"

After a brief pause, Franklin whispered, "It's said that Loraine designed it herself..."

Taken aback, Francis found his view of Loraine transformed once more in the span of a single day.

Francis, despite recognizing Loraine's impressive abilities, knew the importance of maintaining clear lines between family allies and outsiders. Loraine, for all her talent, was still an outsider and a potential adversary to the Wilsons. Her previous actions against a family member only solidified her status as a rival.

Resolved to put the past behind him, Francis decided he had sufficiently avenged Kaley. He directed Franklin to communicate that the Wilson family would cease their hostilities towards the Universe Group.

Not long after this decision was made, Edwin, who had been recently demoted by Francis, stormed in, visibly upset.

"Dad, why have we stopped our actions against the Universe Group? My chance to avenge Kaley hasn't even come yet!"

Looking at his son, Francis couldn't help but contrast Edwin's lack of acumen with Loraine's brilliance. Edwin's recent failure at the auction only deepened his disappointment. In a stern voice, he admonished him, "Why not focus on improving your own business instead of obsessing over Kaley's problems? You're only creating more trouble!"

Edwin, frustrated by the lack of support and a direct answer, felt humiliated and his anger flared. He shot back defiantly. "Fine, if you won't defend our family's honor, I will take matters into my own hands! That's the reason Grandpa insisted we return!"
