

Chapter 1142 Standing Up For Justice

Hearing someone address Kaley as Ms. Wilson, Loraine looked at Kaley with a meaningful smile, her eyes twinkling teasingly.

Kaley's face grew slightly pale. She opened her mouth, then pressed her lips together, forcing herself to stay calm and silent. After all, she hadn't said anything herself. Whatever consequences arose would stem from her friend's indiscretions, not hers.

And surely, Loraine was aware of Kaley's little ploy; she simply chose not to expose it.

At that moment, the shop assistant, Nelly, spotted Loraine and seemed to grasp a lifeline. She quickly moved to hide behind her, tears streaming down her face.

Jennie, pulling out a tissue, gently asked, "What happened?"

Through her sobs, Nelly explained, "These ladies, after finishing their shopping, suddenly wanted to return everything. They accused us of gossiping and said we lacked professionalism. But it's our lunch break now. I chose to help them during my time off..."

Loraine's brow furrowed in disapproval. Meanwhile, Nita responded with arrogance, "We are VIP customers of the mall, and the staff here should be at our service! When we arrived, you were all just gossiping and loafing around!"

She cast a contemptuous glance at Nelly and sneered,
"Someone like you should consider yourself lucky to get the chance to serve Kaley. How dare you talk back!"

Nelly's complexion turned ashen, and she bit her lip hard, a mix of shame, anger, and helplessness washing over her.

She was just an employee, and it was daunting to stand up against such wealthy patrons.

Loraine, repulsed by the arrogance displayed by Kaley's friend, responded with visible irritation, "The employee's actions are both legally and morally justified. You are taking yourselves too seriously, aren't you?"

Nita, fuming, retorted, "What did you say? Do you know who my friend is? She is Ms. Wilson!"

Loraine's face remained impassive. "It's perfectly reasonable for employees to take their scheduled breaks. On the contrary, your behavior is rude, mean, and unreasonable. I can barely stand the sight of you guys, for you disgust me deeply," she stated flatly.

Was it even necessary to save face for them? Certainly not for Kaley, whom Loraine had tolerated for far too long.

Jennie added, "The arrogance of your people comes from your wealth, but let's not forget that it's all inherited. Let me tell you, when it comes to connections, you can't compete with me! Moreover, your behavior infringes on the rights of employees, and they could sue you for this!"

Nita seethed with anger, and Kaley narrowed her eyes, choosing not to respond immediately.

Just then, a senior employee, Lina Burke, entered the shop to take over Nelly's shift. Seeing the group by the entrance, she asked in confusion, "What's happening here?"

Kaley quickly declared her VIP status and her lineage as part of the Wilson family. She explained the situation, then added with a smile, "I just want an explanation. I'll still buy these items."

Staring at Lina, she continued, "If you can provide a satisfactory answer, I'll ensure the sales are credited to your account."

Lina glanced at the luxury bags and her face lit up with excitement. She turned to Nelly and admonished, "Didn't we teach you in training? The customer is always right!"

Then, without skipping a beat, she declared, "Your arrogance is unacceptable. Our shop cannot tolerate such behavior. I'll report this to the manager, and you're fired!"

Nelly clenched her jaw, remaining silent. As the situation escalated, Nita's satisfaction grew. She pointed at Loraine and her friend, proclaiming, "And get these people, who ruined Kaley's shopping experience, out of here!"

Lina nodded and bowed before quickly changing her demeanor towards Loraine and her friend. "Please leave on your own, or I'll have to call security!"

Loraine, who had been silent until being singled out, looked thoughtful and asked, "Are you sure you want to kick me out?"

Lina paused for a moment, then answered calmly, "Yes.
Please refrain from affecting our business."

Loraine gave a light chuckle and replied nonchalantly,
"If you really intend to kick us out, it seems this shop might not be able to stay here much longer."

Kaley's heart raced upon hearing this, and a wave of unease washed over her. Did Loraine have another move up her sleeve?

Assessing the situation, Kaley decided to de-escalate.
She gently pulled Nita aside and suggested in a considerate tone, "Let's just let it go."

Nita, used to wielding Kaley's status to intimidate others, refused to back down. She snapped, "What are you afraid of? Kaley, you've already made significant purchases, but this woman hasn't bought anything.
What right does she have to act so superior?"

Loraine smirked at her words, while Jennie burst into unrestrained laughter.

Then, patting Loraine's hand, Jennie entrusted her with a task. "Lorrie, show them what you've got."

Loraine nodded, turned to Lina, and said casually, "Do not sell this batch of goods to them."

Lina looked startled. "This... This is our shop's merchandise. What gives you the right to decide?"

Loraine lowered her gaze and then casually waved her phone. "Because I can decide whether to stop deliveries to this shop in the future."
