

Chapter 1363 Loraine's Confession

Seeing that single tear, Loraine was taken aback at first but then deeply moved.

She didn't know why the man was crying but sensed that he had connected with her song profoundly.

At the same time, there was something vaguely familiar about him, though she couldn't place where she'd seen him before.

Recalling the special guest's question, Loraine's gaze briefly lingered on Marco before quickly shifting to Rita.

Seeing Loraine's unease, Vincent gently said, "Of course, if you don't have anything to share, that's completely fine. I was just really touched by your song."

His sincere words made Loraine feel understood and respected.

Rita gave Loraine a nod, silently encouraging her with support.

Loraine began to speak slowly, her voice calm as she shared her story. "In the past, I faced some challenges that left me with a facial injury. During that time, I was

Rita gave Loraine a nod, silently encouraging her with support.

Loraine began to speak slowly, her voice calm as she shared her story. "In the past, I faced some challenges that left me with a facial injury. During that time, I was filled with insecurity and couldn't even bear to look at myself. It was my friend who encouraged me to undergo cosmetic surgery and repair my face. Afterward, she continued to push me to step onto the stage with courage. Her unwavering support and encouragement helped me regain my confidence. This song I wrote represents my transformation, akin to a butterfly emerging from a cocoon. I want to reclaim my strength and face challenges without fear."

When she finished, Loraine bowed deeply.

The crowd erupted in applause, full of admiration and support.

Marco sat quietly, his eyes glistening with emotion.

He couldn't bear to think about the pain and challenges that Loraine had endured, feeling a profound compassion for her.

Vincent was also touched by her statement. He noticed the embarrassed expressions on the judges' faces and inwardly scoffed.

These judges had sold their integrity for money, which he found utterly despicable.

Before long, the music show came to a close.

Loraine's exceptional performance secured her the top spot among female singers and second place overall.

The first place went to a seasoned male singer who was both experienced and talented.

He praised Loraine's performance, genuinely saying, "You sang beautifully. Don't let the judges' scores get you down. Those low scores don't reflect your true talent."

"Thank you," Loraine replied gratefully, acknowledging that she still had much to learn and improve.

After that, she prepared to leave.

Rita, recalling something, said, "The investors are here today. I need to talk to the director about the upcoming schedule. Stay here, and if you meet any investors, be polite and respectful."

Loraine felt uneasy hearing this.

Noticing her hesitation, Rita added, "If any of them act inappropriately, you have every right to push back and refuse. We'll take care of any problems. But if it's purely professional, be polite to avoid appearing arrogant."

Loraine sighed in relief, nodded, and stepped aside to wait.

Just then, Marco approached.

He was eager to speak with Loraine but didn't want to overwhelm her.

So, he pretended to pass by casually before stopping to look at her.

Trying to sound nonchalant, he asked, "Were you one of the singers today?"

