

Chapter 1364 Autograph

Loraine tilted her head, her eyes landing on Marco once more.

Suddenly, a vivid memory flashed in her mind of him, tears in his eyes as she sang.

She wondered if he might be just another fan in the crowd.

Loraine answered politely, "Yes, I was one of the singers for today's show."

Marco looked surprised momentarily, but quickly smiled and acted as if he had just remembered. He complimented Loraine, "Your performance was incredible I'm an investor planning to leave early, but your voice was so captivating that I stayed until the very end."

His kind words caught Loraine off guard in a nice way.

She hadn't anticipated that the man before her was an investor, not just a fan, and that her singing could resonate with someone like him.

Loraine soon relaxed, realizing Marco was simply offering sincere encouragement without any hidden motives.

She found herself feeling a bit warmer toward Marco and responded kindly, "Thank you for your kind words. I'll keep working hard."

Loraine soon relaxed, realizing Marco was simply offering sincere encouragement without any hidden motives.

She found herself feeling a bit warmer toward Marco and responded kindly, "Thank you for your kind words. I'll keep working hard."

As Marco gazed at Loraine again, he couldn't help but be drawn to her delicate features.

But soon, he noticed subtle signs of cosmetic surgery in Loraine's face, aside from her eyes.

This realization saddened Marco, as it made him recognize the severe nature of the injury Loraine had experienced.

Amid the busy crowd, Loraine maintained a polite distance. Marco understood she was doing so to prevent any misunderstandings, given his role as an investor.

Although feeling a bit frustrated, he didn't want to cause her any discomfort.

After a brief pause, Marco pulled out his pen and tie, offering them to Loraine. "I loved your song and would like your autograph, but I don't have any paper. Could you sign my tie?"

Loraine was caught off guard by the unusual request.

But after a moment, she realized it was still a perfectly harmless gesture.

After a moment's pause, Loraine accepted the pen and tie.

With a focused expression, she bent down and meticulously signed her new stage name "Lorrie Cruz."

Marco was a bit confused when he saw the name Loraine had written, wondering why she didn't sign her real name, but he didn't dwell on it for long.

Noticing Rita approaching, Marco realized his time was almost up. He thanked Loraine once more before turning to leave.

Shortly after Marco left, Rita returned, smiling brightly.

She said to Loraine, "The performance order will be set based on the results, so there's no need to worry!"

Loraine nodded, but her thoughts lingered on Marco's scent.

When she signed his tie, she had to get close to Marco, allowing her to catch the fragrance of his cologne.

The scent emanating from Marco gave Loraine a sense of familiarity, but she couldn't quite pinpoint where she had smelled it before. The brief closeness left her blushing.

She lightly patted her cheeks, trying to calm herself.

Loraine knew this wasn't the moment to get lost in thought. There was still so much to do. She had to stay focused, keep pushing forward, and continue chasing her dream of success in music.

Regarding the mysterious man in her hazy memories, perhaps one day their paths would intersect once more. By then, Loraine hoped she could face him with more confidence and uncover the answers to the questions lingering in her heart.

