

Chapter 1367 Unfair Editing Practices

The director said, "I wanted to take advantage of Vincent's fans, but who knew he'd end up liking Loraine, almost putting me in a tough spot? Thankfully, the post-production team fixed it and tweaked what he said."

Feeling proud of his smart move, he was convinced he had steered the show exactly how he wanted.

However, the assistant director expressed concern, saying, "Won't the audience get upset? Loraine was amazing too, and this kind of editing might make them feel it's unfair."

The director shook his head confidently. "Relax. We shaped the story in the edit. The audience only sees what we want them to see! We didn't remove Vincent's part. He knows how the game is played by now. And let's be real—Miranda's a star. Would Vincent really risk upsetting her for a newbie?"

The director was sure Vincent wouldn't stir up trouble with the team or Miranda over this.

But he miscalculated the situation.

When Vincent saw the edited show, he was livid.

"This is absurd! What a joke of an edit!"

He couldn't stop himself from shouting in frustration.

His agent, startled, quickly asked, "What happened?"

Vincent had the agent watch the show, then said, "They edited my compliments for Loraine to make it seem like I was praising Miranda! This misleads the audience and disrespects both the singer and me as a guest, right?"

The agent watched the show and saw the clear editing, though he knew the audience might not notice. He couldn't help but let out a sigh.

"I can't let this slide!" Vincent said, quickly posting on Twitter to call out the show team.

He shared the truth on Twitter, saying that Miranda's singing wasn't good and that it was Loraine whom he had praised.

Vincent's tweet quickly sparked an uproar.

Fans rallied to support him, blasting the unfair editing.

Meanwhile, Miranda, who had been enjoying the spotlight from trending searches, suddenly faced a backlash.

Her assistant, looking uneasy, handed her the phone and said, "It's not good. There's an uproar online. Vincent tweeted and is calling out the show."

Miranda frowned as she grabbed the phone and saw what was happening online.

She couldn't believe Vincent would go against her for a newcomer!

On top of that, he had more fans than she did, which complicated the situation.

As Miranda paused, unsure how to react, she suddenly recalled her old trick of playing the sympathy card.

With a sparkle in her eye, she said to her assistant, "Go tell my fans that I'm being bullied and get them to defend me."

Before long, the hashtag "Vincent Bullying Miranda" started trending.

The online conversation quickly turned chaotic, with fans from both sides arguing non-stop.

Caught in the middle, Lorraine felt completely confused and powerless.

She never thought one performance could create such a mess.

For now, all she could do was silently watch the drama unfold, hoping things would calm down soon.

