

Chapter 47 Revise The Plan

For the next few days, Loraine remained quiet and didn't make a move.

Seeing that, Barr assumed Loraine was a pushover and went a step further.

He became more arrogant during the meetings.

Barr said Loraine's plan was difficult to implement and kept asking her to revise the plan and began bossing her around.

"You have removed all these trees. Don't you think we'd need more trees and greenery to make it environment-friendly? Revise it!"

"This building design is a bit repetitive. Add more entertainment places like bars and ballrooms here!"

"What's with roads? Why do they look zig-zag? It's a waste of manpower and resources. Change them to straight roads!"

The workers of the architectural design department were all annoyed.

However, Loraine bit her lip, trying not to lose her temper.

She made a note of all the suggestions and handed the revised plan to Barr.

"I've revised the plan according to your requirements. Could you please sign here?"

She made a note of all the suggestions and handed the revised plan to Barr.

"I've revised the plan according to your requirements. Could you please sign here?"

"If you had been like this earlier, it would have saved us a lot of trouble."

Seeing that Loraine had surrendered, Barr haughtily signed his name on the plan.

His face broke into a triumphant smile. He looked at Loraine's pretty face and said, "Don't blame me for being nosy. But a woman's duty is to stay at home and take good care of her husband and give birth to children. It doesn't seem right for you to return to work after getting a divorce. You better resign from the job and get married soon. Only living a stable life is ideal for women."

Lorraine clenched her fists when she heard that.

Before Lorraine could retort, a cold male voice caught her attention.

"What did you say?"

Marco pushed the door open and walked in.

"Mr. Bryant!" As soon as Barr saw Marco, he flashed a flattering smile. "Welcome, Mr. Bryant!"

"Answer my question!"

"What? I... I was just kidding."

Barr's smug smile vanished, and he soon became flustered.

"Kidding? You just commented on our business partner's private life. Is this your business ethics?" Marco asked bluntly.

Barr lowered his head. "I said that for her sake. She works hard. It was just a suggestion. I didn't mean to demean her in any way."

Lorraine sneered and didn't utter a word.

Barr quickly changed the topic. "Mr. Bryant, you're a busy man. You could have asked your subordinate to attend the meeting. I didn't expect you to show up in person."

Glancing at him, Marco said, "Bryant Group is the collaborator of this project. As the president of Bryant Group, I should attend the meeting. Do you have a problem with that?"

Carl stood behind Marco with his mouth shut, not daring to reveal his boss's true thoughts.

Ever since the project commenced, Marco ordered Carl to keep an eye on Loraine.

As soon as Marco heard someone was picking on Loraine, he abandoned his work and rushed to the company.

A knowing smile emerged on Carl's face as Marco used the project as an excuse.

Barr grew anxious. "Mr. Bryant, you've misunderstood me. I would never object to your decision. I'm glad you're here."

Marco sneered at him.

"I also have a small suggestion for you. I advise you to put aside your dirty thoughts. Don't be nosy, and focus on your work. Well, that's the right thing to do."

Barr froze when he heard Marco defend Loraine.

Sweat beaded his forehead.

He couldn't understand why Marco was standing up for Loraine. After all, they had already divorced.

Seeing this, Loraine showed the notes to Barr and sneered at him.

"Mr. Powell, since you have so many suggestions, how about we ask Mr. Moore to join us? What do you think of my suggestion, Mr. Bryant?" she asked, cocking her head.

Marco looked at Loraine. Seeing the broad grin on her face, he thought for a moment and nodded.

"Carl, go and call Mr. Moore," he ordered.

"No!" Barr blurted out.

He had to help his cousin stop Loraine from approaching Marco.

"Are you not confident in your revised plan?" Loraine provoked him.

"How is that possible?"

Barr didn't bother stopping Carl anymore.

Soon, Klein, the person in charge of the project, arrived.

After understanding the situation, Klein took the revised plan from Barr and looked through it.

"We have revised the plan according to Mr. Powell's suggestions. He is really hard-working," Loraine added.

Barr proudly raised his head.

He felt he was going to get a promotion and reach another milestone in his life.

However, Klein's face darkened when he looked at the design plan.

"Nonsense!" Klein threw the plan at Barr. "Look at it carefully. What the hell have you done?"

Barr froze in shock.
