

Chapter 784 Reprimand From Marco

Apparently, the call was from the enigmatic CEO of Solar Company.

The love of gossip being a universal human trait, Loraine couldn't help but feel very curious about this legendary figure. She was secretly hoping to get some juicy details about him.

But since Doris had just inexplicably sent a wave of hostility her way and acted so possessively, Loraine was keen on avoiding any misunderstandings. So, she refrained from approaching her, fearing that Doris might think she was eavesdropping.

Meanwhile, Doris' complexion had turned pale, and there was no trace in her words or manner of the sweet intimacy she claimed to have with her CEO.

The reason was that the CEO was currently interrogating her. "Doris, did you come back to the country without authorization? Why?"

His voice was remarkably calm, devoid of any emotional fluctuations, but Doris, on the other hand, had broken into a cold sweat and her face had turned ashen.

Marco detested disobedient employees, and as far as he was concerned, her unauthorized return to the country meant that she had crossed a line.

Furthermore, she had concealed her itinerary and came back secretly, all in a bid to avoid Marco and meet with Loraine.

She never expected that Marco would find out so quickly and immediately call her to demand an explanation.

As Doris mentally ran through the possible excuses she could provide, she covered the phone's microphone with her hand and pasted a fake smile on her face. "I knew you were shifting your focus back to the domestic market, so I decided to come back and assist you. This project is crucial, and I don't trust anyone else to handle it. It's also a way for me to help you share your burden."

"If you want to help, your skills are better suited for the ongoing expansion in Zodiac," Marco retorted in a tone of displeasure.

Doris absentmindedly scraped her fingernail along the edge of her phone as she tried to carefully choose the words she would say.

She knew that if she decided to be blunt by saying, "I wanted to come back to Vagow to see you," it would only invite more trouble.

Meanwhile, on the other end of the line, Marco went on in an icy tone, "Doris, I value your abilities, but you should not overstep your bounds or try to act on your own. I entrusted this project to Jeroy. I never assigned it to you at all."

At this point, Doris suddenly realized who had reported her. She turned to Jeroy and shot him an angry glance.

Then she went to a corner to make sure Loraine wouldn't overhear her, before she replied to Marco, "But I'm from Kitay. I'm sure I can negotiate better than Jeroy. I'm doing this for Solar Company, you know."

There was silence on the other end and she could hear his shallow breaths. But all of a sudden, he said in an icy and uncompromising tone that left Doris with a bitter taste in her mouth, "In that case, hurry up and sign that contract. The terms we discussed with Universe Group have already been finalized, and I've reviewed them myself. Doris, don't let the first impression of Solar Company in the domestic market be a flop."

Doris nervously swallowed a lump in her throat as she listened to this. Even though Marco's tone remained steady, she knew he was angry.

He was displeased with the fact that she had overstepped her boundaries and delayed the partnership.

"I've already double-checked and confirmed that Universe Group is indeed qualified to partner with us. We'll be signing the contract very soon," Doris hurriedly replied.

Marco grunted in acknowledgment and said, "Since you're so enthusiastic about domestic projects, I'm assigning you the responsibility of selecting the location for our branch office in Vagow. Make sure you handle it properly."

Doris was taken aback by this instruction. Did she really need to handle such trivial matters personally?

But then, it suddenly occurred to her that this actually meant that Marco valued her!

However, before she could fully revel in this thought, Marco's voice chimed in again, "Until you've sorted out everything at the branch office, leave the affairs of the headquarters alone. Carl will take over. Just focus only on domestic business."

Doris' expression turned sour again in an instant, but she dared not speak her mind.

It was now clear to her that Marco's actions weren't a sign of appreciation but rather a stern reprimand.

Furthermore, she was the one in the wrong, so there was no room for a rebuttal. She gritted her teeth in regret, but there was nothing she could do about it. After a moment of silence, she opened her mouth to talk about another topic, but Marco hung up even before she could say a word.

Doris clenched her jaw, trying her best to suppress her anger. When she turned around, she noticed Loraine standing at a distance, clearly curious but trying to act like she wasn't.

Doris pasted a smile on her face and walked over to meet her. She swallowed her pride and said to her, "The boss has spoken. Universe Group does indeed qualify for a partnership with us. We can now sign the contract."

Loraine chuckled awkwardly and looked away. The whole thing was just puzzling. Doris didn't look like someone who had just had a pleasant conversation with someone she admired. Furthermore, she had even previously mentioned that her boss wouldn't bother with a small company in Vagow, but now, she was claiming that her boss had personally issued instructions to sign the contract with Universe Group.

It was all so contradictory.

Suddenly, a thought occurred to Loraine. What if this boss was working in tandem with Doris, one playing the good cop while the other played the bad cop, all in an effort to establish dominance over her and Universe Group?

Loraine felt this was a shameless and boring move, not to mention very time-consuming.

Meanwhile, Doris walked ahead with a serious expression on her face that clearly signified that she was not to be trifled with. She knew in her mind that if she continued to delay the contract, Marco's attitude would be anything but lenient.

Even if she still wanted to make things difficult for Loraine, she couldn't afford to play tricks with the contract anymore.

She let out a sigh of resignation, and then turned to look at Loraine with a radiant smile on her face. "Once we sign the contract, we'll officially be partners. Let's look forward to a fruitful partnership," she said.

Chapter 785 The Capricious Beauty

Doris' sudden change in attitude left Loraine even more confused and suspicious. This didn't seem like a show of dominance, so what exactly did the executives at Solar Company have in mind?

Loraine found herself struggling to decipher their true intentions, but since Doris was ready to sign the contract, she decided not to dwell on it too much.

She was scared that this capricious beauty might change her mind again, so she hurriedly took her and her team back to the office so they could get the contract signed.

Once everything had finally been settled, Loraine breathed a sigh of relief and smiled at Doris. "Miss Hoffman," she said. "It's getting late, and I need to notify the hospital to make preparations. Can we keep the robot at the office for today? We'll make sure that it's safe and properly stored."

But Doris' face had a look of frustration as if she'd suffered a significant setback and just couldn't express her grievances. After a long, contemplative silence, she finally nodded and said reluctantly, "Fine."

Loraine had already seen firsthand just how unpredictable Doris was, so she didn't bother to wonder what exactly was going through her head this time. The only thing she wanted to do was to handle her business professionally.

She quickly went ahead to make the promised arrangements with the hospital and then she organized accommodation for Jeroy and the bodyguards.

Her efficiency and thoroughness was something she'd learned from Marco. Even in small matters, she took every step seriously and showed utmost dedication.

"Miss Hoffman, have you arranged for your accommodation?" Loraine asked Doris just out of courtesy. "If you don't mind, you can stay..."

But she'd hardly finished the sentence when Doris shot her a frosty glare. "I have my place. I don't need your concern!" she retorted angrily and stood up to leave.

Having been scolded by Marco earlier, Doris felt very angry and frustrated. Hence, she had no patience for any squabble with Loraine. All she wanted to do was to leave as soon as possible. Out of sight, out of mind.

Loraine sighed and shook her head. She was bewildered by Doris' sudden change in demeanor. "But we've already sealed the deal, so why is she still giving me the cold shoulder? Or has she gotten too immersed in the act?" Loraine pondered, unable to figure out what exactly was going through Doris' mind. But since the contract had been successfully signed and there was nothing else for her to do, she decided to just forget about Doris and go straight home.

In the past, she used to avoid going to her family home in order to escape her grandfather's nagging. But now, with Marco there, she found herself going there every day. This delighted her grandfather, but he couldn't resist grumbling about how much Loraine cared for Marco.

This time, when she returned home, Marco immediately approached her and asked in concern, "Was the discussion successful?"

Now that she was home, Loraine no longer had to maintain her CEO demeanor, so she immediately began to vent her frustrations.

She recounted the events of the day, especially her encounter with those peculiar individuals sent by the Solar Company.

After complaining, she remarked, "The CEO of Solar Company isn't a good person at all. He's the reason why a smart and beautiful woman like Doris gave me the cold shoulder!"

Marco was taken aback by this statement. His facial expression was now a mixture of confusion and surprise. After a while, he cautiously replied, "I don't think he would deliberately do something like that."

"How would you know?" Loraine asked, shooting him a quick glance. "Are you close with him in any way? Remember, you can't judge a book by its outer cover."

Apart from the possibility that Solar Company wanted to assert its dominance, Loraine couldn't think of any other reason why Doris had treated her the way she did.

Marco, on the other hand, was hesitant. He was going through the frustration of withholding the truth. He couldn't reveal that he was, in fact, the CEO of Solar Company, since Loraine did not have a good impression of the CEO.

So, with a forced chuckle, he replied, "Aren't Sullivan and I friends? Even though I don't know the CEO personally, Sullivan has told me that he's quite formidable."

"How exactly?" Loraine asked curiously.

Marco blinked, but his face still looked composed. "He built his empire from scratch, you know," he replied with a shrug. "He started as a poor student but later founded a company along with a group of partners. Less than three years later, he rose to prominence, and since then, Solar Company has been an unstoppable force. Even till today, it remains a legend in the business world."

"Wow, that's quite impressive," Loraine remarked in awe.

"Nah," Marco said modestly, "He's average at best. The most impressive thing about him is his reputation."

Loraine kept quiet for a while. Then she said, "Oh, Sullivan is quite the flatterer. His claims are probably exaggerated."

At this point, she couldn't help but recall the events that had happened earlier in the day, especially her conversation with Doris, and she added casually, "Look, I don't think Sullivan's words can be trusted. He previously said that the CEO of Solar Company used to praise me, but today, one of the executives debunked it, saying that their boss was too busy with a multitude of responsibilities to concern himself with a CEO of a small company like mine!"

Marco frowned when he heard this, and he quickly told her, "You are exceptionally talented and deserving of anyone's praise."

But Loraine didn't seem to take the compliment seriously. Instead, she had her mind deeply engrossed in the seemingly exaggerated achievements of Solar Company's CEO. But after a moment of silence, she shrugged and said with a sigh, "Anyway, regardless of all those claims, as far as I know, the former CEO of Bryant Group remains the most outstanding of all men."

The person she was praising had just been about to say a few kind words about the CEO of Solar Company, but when he heard what she said, he nodded and said, "You're right. Your choice of dating him is a reflection of your excellent taste. You're even more exceptional than he is.*

Loraine couldn't help but laugh. Her flattery had been met with another flattery from the person she was flattering. She gave him a quick kiss and hurried off to take a shower.

But the moment she left him, Marco felt a sense of melancholy.

The CEO of Solar Company had already scored negative points in Loraine's eyes. Now, how would he ever be able to reveal his true identity to her in the future?

Chapter 786 Hurtful Words

The next morning, Marco got up early and had breakfast with Loraine.

It was not yet 7 a.m., so Loraine looked quite tired. She stretched herself and sighed, "Today I'll officially hand over the ninth-generation robot to the hospital. I have to go to the company and prepare for this."

Though she was a CEO, she rarely enjoyed any real privileges. On the contrary, she was always the first to arrive at work and the last to leave.

Marco was really worried about her. He stood up and took her coat from the domestic staff and personally helped Loraine wear it. "You were busy all day yesterday. Do you still have to work overtime today?" he asked her in a low voice.

A lot of time had passed since they reunited and things had changed a lot. Now, it was Marco's turn to be a househusband. He was always at home, hoping that Loraine would come back after work and not work overtime. He now knew how uncomfortable it was to be alone at home.

One of the reasons he had urged Doris the previous day to immediately sign the contract was because he wanted Loraine to finish with the issue of the project as soon as possible and come back home early.

Meanwhile, as all these went through his mind, Loraine had something else on her mind. She was feeling very snug and warm in his embrace and she almost wished she could go back to lie down and not go to work anymore.

"I'm just going to the hospital to hand over the robot. After that, my work is over for the day and I'll come back immediately. Don't worry, I won't come back late," she assured Marco.

Though Marco was reluctant to let her go, he had no choice but to do so. "Okay then," he shrugged and escorted her outside. When they got to the car, he still had her hand in his.

Loraine intertwined her fingers with his and rubbed his thumb affectionately. "I really have to go," she said in a low voice.

"Okay," Marco said and kissed her hair.

She knew that if Aldo saw this, he would definitely roll his eyes at the two of them.

He would say that they could easily see each other after she got off work, so there was no need for them to act like this.

After she had finally driven off, Marco looked in the direction she had gone. Though Loraine had said that she was only going to the hospital for a handover, he was still quite worried.

After thinking for a while, he called a taxi and followed her car.

Not long after Loraine finally arrived at the company, someone from Solar Company arrived.

To her surprise, it was not Doris this time but Jeroy.

So she began to wonder, was it because she had passed the test set by Solar Company the day before that Doris had not come today?

Seeing the confusion on her face, Jeroy smiled and offered an explanation, "Miss Hoffman has other work to do, so I'm responsible for the handover today."

"Okay," Loraine nodded with a satisfied smile. Without another word, she and Jeroy took the ninth-generation robot and headed straight for the hospital.

The director, Harlem, was also very interested in this robot, so by the time Loraine and Leroy arrived, they learned that he had been waiting for them for a while.

As soon as Harlem saw them, he smiled happily and greeted Loraine very warmly.

It was impossible for him not to be happy. The ninth-generation robot was such a precious and highly valuable thing. Not only had their hospital been the first one to get the right to use it, they were also the first to have the chance to observe it multiple times and finally get one of it for their own use.

Moreover, he had just heard not long ago that Solar Company had officially partnered with Universe Group to mass produce the robots.

In that case, their hospital would be recognized as a pioneer in the deployment of cutting edge medical technology and this would greatly boost their reputation!

He was very glad and grateful that Loraine had gone to great lengths to make sure that the hospital was the first to get the maiden edition of the robot.

After they had finished exchanging greetings, Loraine made the introductions. "Mr. White, this is Jeroy, the representative of Solar Company. Jeroy, this is Mr. White."

Both men nodded at each other in acknowledgement and then they all proceeded to usher the ninth-generation robot into the hospital. After that, they all moved to the place where the robot would be stored.

Jeroy looked around and nodded in satisfaction at what he saw. Then he said to Loraine, "The employees sent by Solar Company will guide the hospital staff on how to store the robot. It will take some time. Anyway, to be on the safe side, I need to watch the entire process. If you feel bored, you can walk around."

This kind of thing could only look attractive to geeks like Allen, but to any ordinary person, it was just a pile of cold and boring equipment. That was why Jeroy notified Loraine that she could leave if she wanted to.

Knowing that Ariadna was in the hospital, Loraine thought now would be a good chance for her to visit her and tell her the good news. So she smiled and said to Jeroy, "Yes. I have some personal affairs to deal with. See you later then."

Both Jeroy and Harlem respected her very much, so they did not object to her decision. After saying a temporary goodbye to them, Loraine left the lab and made for Ariadna's ward.

In the high-end ward where Ariadna was, there was complete silence. But as Loraine approached the ward, she overheard someone mention her name.

Loraine's eyebrows shot up and she came to a halt. She listened carefully and recognized one of the voices of the people that were talking about her. It was Tillie's.

Her tone was low but still squeaky, like a gossipy garrulous woman. "I just saw the people of Solar Company bring a robot here," she said mysteriously. "Loraine was with them and she came with a young and handsome blond man! Do you think Loraine is having an affair with that guy?"

Chapter 787 Teaching Tillie A Lesson

Loraine was not surprised at all to hear this. Even though Tillie had been polite to her recently, she knew that Tillie still looked down on her because she was born in Vagow. The only reason Tillie no longer displayed any direct hatred for Loraine was because they had been able to borrow the ninth-generation robot with Loraine's help and also because Ariadna trusted her.

But Loraine never expected for once that Tillie would slander her behind her back.

She didn't say anything to let Tillie know of her presence. She just continued to listen, with a slightly angry expression on her face.

Tillie didn't know that the person she was gossiping about was just nearby. She continued talking as if she had personally witnessed Loraine having an affair with Allen.

The two maids asked in surprise, "Really?"

Tillie nodded and raised her chin arrogantly. "Even if she isn't having an affair with that blond guy, she must be having an affair with someone from Solar Company! Otherwise, how could she borrow something that even the Cruz family couldn't borrow? I don't believe she's a virtuous person at all," she stated with conviction.

One of the maids felt convinced by Tillie's claim and she echoed thoughtfully, "Wow. No wonder she can borrow something as important as that robot. And twice for that matter! She must have given her body in exchange! Such a shameless woman!"

But the other maid countered in a low voice, "I don't think it's appropriate for us to make a wild guess. She borrowed the robot just for Miss Cruz, didn't she?"

Tillie glanced at her and scoffed, "You don't even understand what's going on. She desperately wants the Cruz family to be indebted to her. She must be planning to get something from them. Lorraine is from a small family, you know. She only cares about her selfish interests. She can do anything to achieve her target. If the robot is not necessary to save Miss Cruz's life, I will not accept anything borrowed by such dirty means!"

The maid didn't know what to say in response to this. So she shrugged and looked away. But a moment later, her eyes went wide and she gasped, "Miss To..."

"What are you screaming for?" Tillie interrupted her with an angry frown before turning to look in the direction the maid was focused on. But what, or rather, who she saw, left her so shocked that she nearly fell off her chair. But she quickly recovered herself and asked demurely, "Lorraine, why... why are you here?"

Lorraine looked at Tillie with an indifferent look on her face and said with a sneer, "Is this the kind of attitude that you displayed when the Cruz family sent you to ask Solar Company to lend them the robot? No wonder Solar Company refused the request."

Tillie's face turned pale when she heard this. Not only was she embarrassed that Lorraine had caught her gossiping, she was also ashamed and annoyed by the open ridicule, and she immediately shot back, "What do you mean by that, Lorraine? How dare a poor girl born in Vagow say such a thing about the Cruz family? Let me warn you, you shouldn't make the mistake of trying to smear the Cruz family!"

"I'm not the one who smeared the Cruz family. You are," Loraine retorted.

This totally pissed Tillie off and she shouted, "How dare you? Don't think you can yell at me just because you helped the Cruz family!"

"Are you trying to say you represent the entire Cruz family?" Loraine asked in a stern tone that instantly silenced Tillie.

Tillie's face turned red in impotent rage, but before she could even think of how to articulate a response, Loraine went on, "The Cruz family has been in Vagow for some time now. Don't you watch or read any news here? If you are truly aware of what's going on in the city, you wouldn't make such arrogant and ignorant statements!"

"No matter how good Vagow is, it can't compare with Zodiac," Tillie retorted. "Besides, I was only talking about Universe Group and you, not the whole of Vagow. Don't misquote me!"

Since she was almost driven out by the medical director of the hospital the last time she discredited Vagow, Tillie was desperate to point out that she had said nothing bad about the city. She knew she would be doomed if Ariadna could not continue her treatment at the hospital because of her.

Though she vehemently denied discrediting the city, she was determined not to apologize to Loraine.

"The government has just ranked Universe Group as an advanced enterprise, and it has just signed an official partnership with Solar Company," Loraine promptly informed her. "So, which are you doubting? The government's decision or the judgement of Solar Company? As for why I'm here today, since I'm the president of Universe Group, is there anything wrong with me transporting a valuable robot together with my partners?"

Tillie couldn't provide any claim of wrongdoing, so she kept her mouth shut. But after a while, she muttered, "It's just a partnership you have with Solar Company. The Cruz family has many projects and collaborations that are far greater. Universe Group is only powerful within Vagow. Yet, it's still inferior to the Cruz family!"

Obviously, as a Zodiac citizen and a member of the Cruz family, Tillie felt a sense of superiority and often looked down on Universe Group and its CEO.

"Really?" Loraine sneered with a cold look in her eyes. "Since the Cruz family is so powerful and you think I'm not a good person, then I think there should have been no need for you to borrow this surgical robot. After all, the Cruz family is so great that you can develop one by yourselves, right?"

Chapter 788 An Eye For An Eye

Since the corridor was very quiet, Loraine's cold voice was heard by everyone.

"Are you threatening me now?" Tillie asked in a trembling voice, her face pale in fear.

"Didn't you think about the consequences when you slandered me?" Loraine retorted. "Or do you think you can just slander me and get away with it because I'm nice?"

Seeing how serious Loraine was, Tillie was now in a panic. "You... you can't do this," she stuttered in fear. "The robot is important to Miss Cruz. Aren't you her friend? You can't watch her die."

But Loraine didn't listen to her. Instead, her face turned even colder.

Tillie knew she was the one at fault, but instead of apologizing, she had continued to boast about her superiority. Now, Loraine had vowed to show her that she was the greater one here.

Of course, Loraine didn't want Ariadna to die. After all, the robot was borrowed mainly for her. But Tillie and Ariadna were two different people.

Ariadna was an innocent friend of hers who deserved all the love she could get from her, while Tillie was a despicable staff who only took advantage of the Cruz family's power and used it to bully others.

Lorraine was confident that Tillie must have offended many people in Vagow and made many enemies for Ariadna during the time she represented the Cruz family.

Unfortunately, not everyone knew that Tillie's behavior had nothing to do with Ariadna. Hence, they would just link both of them together, causing Ariadna to suffer for Tillie's actions.

Lorraine could see that if Tillie was allowed to continue being so arrogant, she would ruin Ariadna's reputation.

But no matter how she was punished, Tillie never learned her lesson. Lorraine was sure that even Ariadna couldn't control her.

It now fell to her to make sure that Tillie stopped doing crazy things.

As she thought of this, Lorraine couldn't help but feel so angry, but she didn't show it on her face. Instead, she said casually, "I can help Ariadna, as long as you sincerely apologize to me, promise to behave yourself from now on and never offend anyone with your arrogance."

But Tillie was not satisfied with these conditions and she made that pretty clear. "What I said was the truth. Universe Group is not as good as the Cruz family. You can't say that I..."

But when she saw the look in Lorraine's eyes, she swallowed the rest of her words, though she still strongly disagreed with Lorraine in her mind.

"I have nothing against Ariadna, but we are not that close," Lorraine pointed out to her. "Now, I'm thinking that perhaps it's Ariadna who is secretly telling you to act so arrogantly and superciliously."

Having said this, Lorraine gave Tillie a meaning smile and asked,

"If that's the case, then why should I bother to save someone who asked her staff to insult and slander me? There are countless people who are asking to borrow the robot. If you continue to treat me like this, I have every right to refuse to lend the robot to Ariadna! As you said, I'm just a businesswoman from a small family who can do anything for money, right?"

By now, Tillie's face had turned very pale and she couldn't help but regret everything she had said. She wished Loraine had not caught her gossiping about her behind her back.

She was very scared that Loraine would really withhold the robot like she was threatening to do. If that happened, the Cruz family would definitely not take it lightly with the person who had angered Loraine and caused them to lose this precious chance to save Ariadna.

At this point, Tillie had no choice but to lower her head and say, "Miss Torres, I'm sorry. I'm a bitch. It's my fault that you're pissed off. I shouldn't be gossiping and slandering you behind your back. I'll restrain myself from now on. Just please don't change your mind about lending the robot to Miss Cruz."

Looking at the fear in Tillie's eyes, Loraine sighed, hoping that Tillie had now realized her mistakes and would never cause trouble again that would affect Ariadna.

Everything she had said about withholding the robot was just to warn Tillie. Now that she had apologized, Loraine stopped issuing any more threats and said instead, "For the sake of Ariadna, I'll forgive you. I hope you'll remember what you said today and stick to it forever. By the way, is Ariadna awake? I want to see her."

"Yes, of course. I won't disturb you," Tillie nodded enthusiastically.

Loraine had deliberately come at this time of the day. As expected, when she entered the hospital room, Ariadna was wide awake.

Ariadna was pleasantly surprised to see Loraine and she squealed with a bright smile, "Lorrie! Why are you here?"

Though they communicated a lot on the phone, they were much happier talking face to face.

Loraine pinched her face playfully and replied with a smile, "I brought the robot to the hospital. They are installing the equipment now, that's why I took this chance to come see you."

Ariadna's eyes went wide with surprise.

What Loraine had just said meant that she could have an operation very soon!

Just then, Loraine rubbed her head and added in a gentle tone, "You can have the operation when the hospital is ready to put the robot to use. Don't worry, you will recover very quickly."

With tears of joy and gratitude in her eyes, Ariadna threw herself into Loraine's arms.

She had been ready to die. But Loraine had just brought her this hope of survival.

Fearing that Ariadna would be too emotional, Loraine quickly comforted her and urged her not to cry. Fortunately, some nurses walked in just then and said that they needed to do some physical examination on Ariadna in order to create a plan for the operation.

Holding up the little girl still cuddled in her arms, Loraine could see that Ariadna was now nervous and holding on tightly to her
