Chapter 1601: No Fun For The Wicked.

He found the seal quickly. It was at the center of the divine plane. It is equidistant from the realm rift, so no matter the direction he comes from, he will need to travel the same distance to reach it. But he will only find it if he moves in a straight line in its direction. Any other way, and he will go around in circles.

No one attacked him on the way, so he had to lament, "The Tyrant race is smart and powerful, but they have lost the power of diversity."

Apart from the fact that the Tyrant realm doesn't have different races to strengthen their defense against the demons, there are also no gods in the divine plane to fight the demon gods and keep them here. A single divine plane was able to keep CARNAGE from invading a plane in the High Heaven Realm, so the importance of gods is clear.

But the Tyrants killed all of the gods. Now Aeternus can only imagine how glorious it would have been for him to destroy the gods blocking his way. He would have grown stronger from doing so, and he would have also earned contribution points.

It is truly a loss to him because he can estimate the number of gods that a large realm like the Tyrant realm would have been able to produce. Taking the High Heaven realm as an example, even if there's only one god per plane, there would be 100,000 gods to defend the divine plane.

One god per plane is obviously too small. If there were an average of 10 per plane, there would be 1,000,000 gods. If all those 1,000,000 gods or more were defending the divine plane, the Tyrants wouldn't have to defend it themselves, and the best the demon gods would have succeeded in doing is gaining access to the Tyrant Realm after a thousand years of fighting. They might even manage to tempt some people in the realm into becoming their servants. But it wouldn't have been easy for the demon gods to gain access to the Tyrant realm. Unfortunately, the Tyrants wiped out the gods, weakened the demons who could have been their allies, and then provided the perfect route for the demon gods to enter the realm. Their ability to connect to their land and draw power from it has undone them. It led to their need for conquest, and now it will lead to their demise.

The Tyrants infected everything and everyone. The demon gods infected them there by infecting everything and everyone. As for hardworking demon gods like him, he has to head to the gates of heaven and do the work that all the demon gods ought to do together. What's worse is that he has to do it without someone jumping out to be his snack.

The seal was also undefended when he found it. All he can see around it is a white plain, and above it is the pitch-black sky.

He wasn't surprised by the lack of defense because staying in the divine plane right now and defending it is like defending the gate of your house while your wife is being raped. It is a waste of time for them to do so. The best decision is to go and kill the rapist. Or at least try to kill the rapist.

He smiled just thinking about it. He thought to himself, "Let's make this an orgy. After, there's love in sharing, and the more, the merrier."

The demon gods are violently raping the Tyrant realm right now, but he intends to make things even worse for them through the gates they left unguarded. He intends to make it a bad decision not to stop him from reaching the gate of heaven.

The demon kings of the High Heaven Realm were the first to come up through the realm rift. They came up to find emptiness. But they were able to catch a glimpse of the demon god of Chaos, so they chased after him.

This led to a throng of demons walking on the divine plane as if they were on a pilgrimage. It is strange because demons don't go on pilgrimages. It is stranger still because even if they do go on pilgrimages, it won't be in the divine plane. It would be somewhere they are not in danger of being attacked.

Aeternus ignored them and focused on the seal. It is a circular area of raised ground. It is also transparent, so he can see the main plane down below through it.

He said, after some observation, "This is going to be a little tricky."

The gates of heaven are sealed by a seal jointly created by 100,000 Supreme Tyrants. In terms of quality, it is not nearly as powerful as the barrier blocking the realm rift. But in terms of quantity, it is several times more powerful than the barrier of the realm rift.

The gate of heaven is a round hole in the white ground of the divine plane. It is the only passage between the divine plane and the main realm for foreigners and invaders of the realm.

Inhabitants of the realm don't need to take it. They can pass through the white ground of the divine plane without resistance. As for him, he must pass through the gate of heaven, so he must overcome the seal on it.

The seal itself is translucent and cloudy. Its surface is flickering with tiny white lights. These white lights are the 100,000 individual threads woven together to form the barrier.

He created a Chaos avatar to attack the barrier. The white motes of light flickered and shined brighter as the avatar smashed into the seal.

Some of the motes of light went out, but the seal didn't break because there were still more that the attack didn't destroy. Then the ones that went out came back on. They kept the light intensity and resistance of the seal constant despite the barrage of attacks from the Chaos avatar.

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1602: Special Ability. - Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1602: Special Ability.

Chapter 1602: Special Ability.

Aeternus observed to himself and the other clones, "These threads can heal and restore themselves quickly. If I don't overwhelm the barrier instantly, I won't be able to destroy it."

He can see that he will need to destroy all the threads at once to destroy the seal. That will require a power capable of destroying 100,000 Supreme Powers at once. Such a thing doesn't exist. At least not on the light side of the void universe.

"This is interesting." He said, as he observed the flickering barrier. "How did they make it work?"

A world god is required to destroy the seal. That much is certain. The alternative is to kill the Supreme Tyrants that made the seal one by one. So he can't believe that a couple of sovereigns managed to come up with something like that.

It is still impressive that they managed to get thousands of Supreme powers to work together, even if they had the assistance of the Will of the Realm. It is doubly impressive that they managed to weave something like this even though the supreme power they used wasn't theirs.

This is because, Supreme powers don't work together normally. Concepts don't even work together, much less supreme laws and the power they bestow.

That's why Supreme Origin gods don't use world fragments. They can't combine the Supreme Law of another entity with theirs. The best they can use a world fragment for is to use its power source to empower their Supreme Law instead of using Origin essence.

But that's just two Supreme powers. One can imagine just how impressive it is to fuse a hundred thousand Supreme Powers. Not only did they make them work together to form the seal, they also made the seal stable and capable of regeneration.

Legion is already an outlier capable of fusing Supreme powers of the same origin, and that's only because of the Tree Father's spark of power, which enables them to control power from different sources.

But even then, they can't make the Supreme Power do the same thing. Legion-5 used three Supreme Powers, but he was always using them for different things. It would have been a waste to use two or three Supreme Powers for defense. One is already enough to reach the limit of the light side.

So one can imagine just how powerful a seal focused on defense with 100,000 Supreme Powers is. It is understandable that Aeternus and all of Legion are wondering how the Tyrants managed to do this.

Aeternus spent more time examining the barrier. He noticed some slight differences. Legion's fusion is qualitative, while the fusion in the seal is quantitative. This is its inherent weakness.

The Supreme powers possessed by Legion have the advantage of having the same origin, so the direction and purpose after fusion can be manipulated. They can be used for different things or for the same thing.

The fused Supreme Powers of the Tyrants, on the other hand, only have the same direction and purpose. They do the same thing at the same time, which is to resist attacks, and they can't do anything else.

Legion can line up their Supreme Power so that even if one is defeated, another one can switch from doing something else to taking its place. This seal can't do that. Its advantage is that 100,000 of them have to be destroyed at once to destroy the seal. The disadvantage is that a single attack can destroy 100,000 of them and the seal.

He thought to himself, "This is powerful. It is very powerful. But it is not perfect. Nothing is perfect."

Soverick joined in, "These threads look like roots. They look like the roots that the Tree Father saw infiltrating the whole realm. This could be a unique ability of Tyrants. After all, they descend from Shikis, and there used to be just one Shiki. Maybe that translated into their ability to fuse Supreme Powers."

Helios asked, "But what kind of ability can fuse Supreme Powers of various origins? It is unheard of."

Aeternus shook his head, "It doesn't matter if it is normal or not. What matters is that we can't copy it and I have to destroy the seal."

He concluded that it was an innate ability, not something he could copy. So he decided to move on to breaking the seal.

The configuration of the barrier has granted it almost perfect invulnerability. This is because any attacker can only have one Supreme Law. So they might be able to defeat the threads individually, but they are unlikely to break the threads faster than they heal.

Even demon gods will be stumped by this arrangement, as the seal is being maintained by the divine plane itself. So in a way, trying to break the seal is trying to fight the whole divine plane. Considering that this is not a single divine plane but the amalgamation of several tens of thousands of them, then it is no easy feat.

The Tree Father avoided the seal and passed through when it was open, but now he has to face it head on.

Aeternus whistled appreciatively. "Maybe the Supreme Tyrants were not so desperate when they decided to leave their gates unguarded. Who can break this?"

Then he grinned evilly. "Unfortunately, they have met me."

His eyes have seen through the seal, so he knows how best to attack. He raised his clawed black hand towards the seal. Chaos energy gushed out of his hand and submerged the barrier. The translucent barrier became covered with black energy the color of the sky.

He wasn't in a hurry with his attack. He just continued to create more and more Chaos energy without stopping.

He muttered with confidence, "Chaos defeats all. All will fall to Chaos."

He hasn't fully comprehended chaos, but he knows that it represents infinite randomness.

Chaos doesn't have a weakness, but it does have one strength and one strength alone.

That strength is that it corrupts everything with entropy. Then it converts them into itself. So Chaos is always begetting more Chaos.

A/N: Bonus chapter for the 1,400 power stones voting goal.

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1603: Falling Sky.

- Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1603: Falling Sky.

Chapter 1603: Falling Sky.

Chaos itself doesn't have any weaknesses because it is always changing. Its strength comes from the fact that it tries to force other systems to change too.

Those systems that go along with the forced change eventually break because the corruption of entropy increases the amount of unusable energy within a system or possessed by an entity, and it also increases the randomness in the system.

Unless a system has infinite capacity, it will eventually fall apart as entropy occupies too much of it. Even the universe will fall apart in due time as entropy increases. It will take time, but it will happen. The same thing will happen to this seal. He just needs to be patient.

The seal flickered as soon as Chaos energy touched it. All the threads defended the seal against the attack at the same time. They appeared like lines of different colors on the barrier. They were pulsating and shifting to defend the attack.

This reaction caused all of the threads to be exposed to Chaos energy at the same time. So none of them could avoid the corruption of Chaos.

The threads of Supreme Power had two choices. Either they break or get rid of the corruption somehow. They chose not to break. Instead, they transferred the corruption to the divine plane.

This is another property of the seal that makes it nearly unbreakable. The seal has the support of the whole divine plane. Any force that hits the seal will be rendered crippled after being transferred to a place as large as the divine plane. The attacks will lose their pressure and sharpness, so they won't be able to break the seal.

It is a good idea to use the whole divine plane as the foundation for the seal. It truly stomped Aeternus. His corruption was carried away from the seal and spread all over the divine plane.

So the only thing he could do was keep producing Chaos energy to create more corruption. He wasn't impatient. He continued to do so for more than 11 hours.

The demon kings had caught up to him by then. Even demon lords and their armies had shown up. They were all silent as they arranged themselves around the gate of heaven.

No one said anything. There was only silence and the silent corruption of the seal. Aeternus, in his 10-kilometer form, stood over the equally large seal patiently. The demon kings that rival him in size chose to shrink their form to a few meters in height so as not to draw his attention or ire.

Soon all the demons had to rise to the air because standing on the divine plane meant being in contact with Chaos energy. The demons that were too slow were contaminated and devoured.

Aeternus didn't let the temptation that their existence represented override his common sense. Especially since he lost some of his contribution points when those demons died.

He just snorted and continued producing Chaos energy. His dedication was rewarded after 12 hours of work. The divine plane began to shake. The white ground of the divine plane had already turned pitch black. The seal, on the other hand, was fine, so Aeternus continued his work diligently.

He said to the seal, "You refused to submit when you had a lot to lose. Now we will see how far you're willing to gamble. Will you give up when you are about to lose everything, or will you give up when you have nothing left to lose?"

The reply to his question came very soon. The shaking of the divine plane increased rapidly in a short amount of time. It was soon reaching its limits. Cracks were appearing in the black ground.

Any other demon god would have given up after using so much energy, but he didn't feel the pinch. He continued to use the seal to corrupt the whole divine plane.

Soon, an earthquake began to move through the divine plane. It caused the cracks to spread all over the blackened ground. The cracks began to deepen and widen. They went from being surface fractures to becoming gaps in the depth of the divine plane.

Things only got worse. The roar of the expansion of the cracks filled the divine plane. Even so, the seal on the gate of heaven remained intact. It was just shaking slightly. It continued to dump its woes onto the shoulders of the supportive divine plane.

It was a truly toxic relationship. The seal took full advantage of the divine plane and gave nothing back. The cracks in the divine plane expanded until one could see the main plane through them. These cracks were more than 1 kilometer deep and 10 meters wide. The demons can use it to leave the divine plane, but they didn't move an inch.

Aeternus said to them, "Go on."

It was then that they sighed in relief and roared. Then they went down into the cracks to visit destruction on the plane.

Meanwhile, Aeternus was focused on the seal. He said to it, "Until your last breath, huh? I can respect that kind of stubbornness."

The seal is truly stubborn. It refused to budge, even when it had lost its function. The 100,000 threads continued to flicker in defense, as if they could resist forever.

Aeternus also didn't give up on the opportunity to bring down the whole divine plane, so he continued to corrupt it.

The seal eventually reached its limit. It was vibrating silently but at a high frequency. The next moment, it just exploded with a flash of light. Of course, the flash was buried by the ocean of black Chaos energy, so even its final radiance went unseen.

The whole divine plane also fractured and began to fall. It was a cracked dome falling to the earth below. It looked like the sky was falling to those below.

Aeternus followed the broken fragments as they fell down the plane. He looked at the Tyrant Realm beneath him, which was also fracturing due to the effort of demons, and was full of appreciation for Mother High Heaven's nurturing plan.

He thought to himself, "The entire abyss can't threaten the High Heaven Realm, but the Tyrant Realm can't withstand us. This goes to show that Mother High Heaven is not an ordinary Will of the realm." They are both Wills but they have different methods of raising their children. Mother High Heaven encouraged individual opportunity for each race to shine to a certain level and for diversity to flourish. Even gods and demons were able to flourish in the High Heaven Realm. That diversity granted the High Heaven Realm resistance to myriad attacks that the Tyrant Realm clearly lacks. The demons of the high heaven realm can't even threaten some planes, but they have brought low an entire Tyrant realm. All he can see on the main plane is destruction. Oceans of various colors have appeared where there used to be none. These oceans are growing larger and submerging their surroundings, killing everything along the way.

Above the oceans are Supreme Tyrants attacking the oceans in a bid to stop their expansion. Unfortunately, they are not doing enough damage to offset the replenishment of energy from devouring the environment. It is practically a losing battle. He shook his head at the sight and muttered, "Of course, Mother High Heaven must have been doing something right by succeeding in raising a realm lord, but the Will of the Tyrant Realm has truly done poorly. Even if the demon gods were not here, the Supreme Beasts and dragons would have surely turned this realm upside down too."

"Especially the Supreme Beasts. They specialize in finding weaknesses and exploiting them. The dragons would just have used brute force to overcome every obstacle in their way. They would have burned everything to ashes." The Tyrant realm is still resisting, seeing as less than 10% of its surface has been corrupted. But it is on its way to destruction. The suns are flickering in the sky, the protection of the divine plane is gone, and there is a looming darkness in the void spreading, infecting everything, and threatening to drown everything.

There's also a powerful object being built within the folds of space. If not for his special eyes, he wouldn't have noticed the hidden accumulation of energy. It made him lament, "If a dragon is building something, then things are truly dire." It is not common for dragons not to rely on brute force because brute force is usually enough to solve every problem. So if one has decided to put in the effort to build something, one can only imagine the kind of devastation it will unleash. Everything Aeternus saw made him say with certainty, "High Heaven Realm is definitely going to win this era of conquest." He turned his attention to the many oceans of various colors expanding in the plane. These oceans are demon gods. They are like vile plagues. They have infected the realm down to the soil and are spreading rapidly like forest fires. The Supreme Tyrants are trying to combat them, but it is not easy. The best they can achieve is to halt the advance of the demon gods by using their filaments to barricade the area around the demon gods. The demon gods can't infect them, so they are fighting fire with fire. "I guess it is about time to get to work." He can pick any location and start destroying it. But he is targeting the quarantine zones that are being formed around the demon gods. It is those areas that will give him the highest contribution. So instead of creating one large zone of corruption, he shot out Chaos energy to several locations to create small zones of corruption meant to hinder the Supreme Tyrants efforts. This way, the demon gods were able to continue expanding unimpeded. His contribution points began to soar as he did this, and as many Origin gods began to enter the Tyrant realm thanks to the abyss of the divine plane. Soon, he reached the top 0.5% of contribution points and crossed it.

If they reach the top 0.1% and maintain it till the end of the era of conquest, Legion will succeed in securing the realm lord's help in the acquisition of realm hearts.

At this point, it is all but certain for them. After all, he is earning another flat 20% from the contributions of every Origin god and demon that are taking advantage of the absence of the divine plane. -----High Heaven Realm. The three clones in the high heaven realm have resurrected and are still being hounded. No one is fighting them anymore, but many Origin gods are following them around, not willing to take their eyes off of them.

There are not many doing this. The realms are fusing, so many Origin gods have turned their attention towards preparing for the invasion. The divine plane of the Tyrant Realm is also absent, so many of them have rushed to it. Soverick has also been spreading information about potential dungeons in the public channel, so many Origin gods temporarily gave up hunting the clones in favor of securing the dungeons. They did this even though they knew that Soverick was throwing them bones to distract them as if they were dogs. But that's the truth. They are dogs who were hounding him for benefits just a while ago. They couldn't get his meat, now some bone scraps have to be enough for them. The enemy of the high heaven realm has also made some progress. The Origin gods of the Tyrant Realm have amassed themselves into an army and are about to invade the High Heaven Realm. This news was announced by Mother High Heaven herself, so it is undoubtedly true. She had said, "Prepare for invasion immediately! Prepare for invasion immediately!"

Then she went on to list information about the incoming enemy, such as their estimated number, the distribution of power ranging from one star Origin gods to Supreme Origin gods, how many of them had world fragments, etc. This information was extensive and very accurate.

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1605 Setting The Battlefield. - Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1605 Setting The Battlefield.

Chapter 1605 Setting The Battlefield.

Her announcement made everyone remember that they were in a dangerous situation called the era of conquest. A loss in it means that they can forget about becoming world gods. They forgot because it really hadn't felt dangerous until now.

This was the final blow that made the clones regain peace. Every Origin god wanted to get some contribution points. Even if they don't manage to secure the realm lord's assistance, they can use their contribution points to buy a lot of things.

Things like Life Crystals and the Authority of the Celestial Supreme, which can be used as substitutes for the world seed and world engine, can be bought. They will become weak world gods if they use this, but it is a step in the right direction. Besides, they can upgrade their world in the future. So everyone within the High Heaven realm began to prepare for the upcoming fight. Apparently, the realm lord succeeded in stopping the enemy from reinforcing the Tyrant Realm, but he can't stop them from attacking the High Heaven realm. n/ô/vel/b//in dot c//om

By the looks of things, he didn't even bother to stop them from invading the high heaven realm. He didn't attempt to create a blockade around the High Heaven Realm at all, so enemies could come in for a fight. Some people spoke about the madness of it. Common sense dictates that he should have done the opposite. Many people would have chosen to turn the high heaven realm into an unbreakable shell since he had the means to. But the realm lord's decision cannot be faulted since his move dictated the battlefield. The Tyrants can't access their realm directly, so they have to come to the High Heaven realm. If the realm lord is prepared for it, he might be able to wipe them all out in one fell swoop. The move can only be called unorthodox, but it has its advantages. For one, the High Heaven realm was able to make full use of Mother High Heaven's ability to notice the intrusion of Origin gods, who are not her children, into her realm. This way, the movements of the enemy can be tracked reliably since they are limited to the high heaven realm. This is why everyone was able to get accurate information about the invaders. She also created missions to hunt them for high contributions. This has succeeded in eliminating every spy sent into the realm. So the enemies have decided to go all out.

They have become especially desperate after hearing of the absolute destruction of the divine plane of the Tyrant realm. After all, if their enemies can enter their realm anyhow, they have to do something equally destructive too, or they will lose the war. They didn't even hide their movements. Hundreds of billions of origin gods approached the High Heaven Realm together from the immortal lands. Less than a billion of them are true tyrants. The rest are their army of undead and hosts created with their concepts. The Tyrants are few in number. This is because, despite their subjugation of the whole realm, competition is fierce amongst them. Very few of them grow enough to become immortals, and the ones that do don't want to leave the realm, so they remain sovereigns of law. Mother High Heaven advised her children, "Stay in the divine plane! Don't confront them in the void!" This is because the Origin god army is accompanied by more than one world god. Any kind of resistance against them will fail because of the support of these world gods. Not unless the realm lord is willing to split his resources and fight them in the void. They have to wait for the enemies to enter the realm. That way, the Tyrants will lose the support of their world gods. They will also be suppressed by the realm and lose the support of their world fragments. This is the second advantage of setting the battlefield. The realm lord was able to choose a location that was advantageous to him. The only disadvantage is that the battle will cause destruction to the realm, which will weaken it. This cannot be avoided, even if the fight is limited to the divine plane. Energy will still need to be expended to heal the damage and keep the plane intact. But it is still better than allowing world gods to interfere in the battle.

If that were to happen, the high heaven realm would not be able to take advantage of its higher number of Origin gods. That is the third advantage of deciding the battlefield. So Mother High Heaven warned the Origin gods to remain in the divine plane. The clones of Legion also went there to prepare for the battle. The divine plane has a gate of heaven, but that's only for defenders. People who are born in a realm don't need it to gain access to the divine plane. Especially since they are allowed to move through the white landmass of the divine plane by the Will of the plane. So the clones didn't need to pass through the gate of heaven to reach the divine plane. They simply flew right up.

They found other Origin gods there. No one disturbed them at all. Everyone was busy preparing for the fight.

The clones decided to spread themselves throughout the divine plane to maximize their area of activity instead of working together and risking drawing too much attention to themselves. Unlike the Tyrant Realm, the gods are present in the divine plane, and they are many in number too. The divine realm is being invaded, so they too are getting ready for the invasion. After all, it is their opportunity to make contributions to the plane. The participation of the gods in the battle is the fourth advantage gained from setting the battlefield. It is something the realm lord didn't have to put in much effort to ensure.

The gods don't need a coalition to motivate them to defend the divine plane like the demons. The fact that they too can use the contribution points they earn in its defense is all the motivation they need. -----

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1606 Main Preparations. - Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1606 Main Preparations.

Chapter 1606 Main Preparations.

The position of Celestial Supreme has been taken away since the divine planes fused, but the Authority of the Celestial Supreme can be acquired again with enough contributions. This will also grant their possessors the right to create a pantheon.

What's more, there is no limit to the number of Celestial Supremes anymore. Any Celestial can become one. They don't need to suffer under their previous Celestial Supreme anymore.

That's just one of the many benefits that gods stand to gain from the era of conquest. But the gods don't need them to participate in the upcoming battle because there is a threat of death for them.

They may be gods, but they feel like mortals in the face of a war that concerns the fate of two realm trees. Not only is the battlefield their home, which they have to defend, but if the defense fails and the realm is destroyed, they too will go with it. So the benefits are the icing on the cake for them. The third group of entities preparing for the invasion of the divine plane are the demon gods. They sent over their clones to participate in the battle too.

Defending the realm doesn't appear to be more rewarding than wreaking destruction in the Tyrant Realm, but it is also not good to put all their eggs in one basket, so they are here to insure their interests. The main defenders remain the Origin gods. They have the advantage in numbers and power. Plus, they can also resurrect, so they are practically inexhaustible. This quality of theirs is why the major preparation they are undertaking is the setting up of a resurrection point in the divine plane.

Anyone can buy something called a spawn point with their contribution points from Mother High Heaven. Large organizations can buy the spawn towers instead.

The spawn point is a small runic cube, while the spawn towers are large runic pillars. These two devices can be bonded to a single Origin god or many Origin gods, respectively. If those Origin gods die, they will resurrect from it first instead of their other preparations in the void universe. This is the fifth advantage of setting the battlefield. It is probably the most important one too, as it can take full advantage of the immortality of Origin gods.

Anyone can die in the upcoming battle. Even the Supreme Origin gods are not certain of coming out unscathed from it. So they have to prepare to die and resurrect.

It is best if they resurrect in the realm so that they can rejoin the battle quickly. It won't do if they resurrect in the immortal lands and have to make their way back across the void universe. They very well might not be able to reenter the realm again, considering that there are world gods waiting outside of it. Legion didn't spend their points on this spawn point. This is because they don't need it to resurrect in the realm. They can resurrect in any place in the realm they want, as long as Legion-7 is alive. And they have the ability to teleport to each other, so unless they all die together at the same time, they will always be able to find their way to the realm.

Besides, the spawn points only give Origin gods of the high heaven realm the right to resurrect in the realm. They will not gain any assistance from Mother High Heaven during the resurrection, so they have to empower the spawn point with soul stones or origin essence before returning it to Mother High Heaven.

This investment will determine how fast they resurrect. And since nothing can be as fast as resurrection with Legion-7, it would be too slow and wasteful for the clones to use the spawn point. The other preparation for the battle is the setting up of fortresses and large weapons on the divine plane. This is the sixth advantage of setting the battlefield. The high heaven realm can turn the battlefield into deadly traps, and their enemies will still impale themselves on it because they have no other choice. The realm lord did not utilize a plane-by-plane invasion for the era of conquest, so organizations or individuals can't use the mortal forces they have trained to storm the other realm. But they can still use the weapons they have built to turn the divine plane into somewhere no self preserving person would want to invade. Some of the fortresses are land-based. Many Origin gods came together to build massive defensive structures on the divine plane. They are truly large, especially the ones that Legion is giving out for pittance that look like the shell of a tortoise. The shells cover a large area of ground but have tiny holes in them where massive cannons and all sorts of deadly weapons poke through. The users can stay beneath the shell, where they will be safe and capable of dishing out fire and brimstone to their enemies.

The Tree Father built the shell with resources that Legion-1 and Legion-5 had redirected from well-meaning immortals in the immortal lands. Now they are selling them at cost price and are also getting contribution points from Mother High for their contribution. So they are not losing anything, apart from the time it took to build the shell. These shells and many other structures will be the base of the Origin gods for resisting the invasion. With it, they will be able to rest and recuperate in battle when needed. There are also many fortresses that are air-based. The racial council of the former Virut plane, for example, is using their Leviathans. These floating armored land masses created both defensive and offensive arrays in the sky of the divine plane.

There are also many fortresses that are air-based. The racial council of the former Virut plane, for example, is using their Leviathans. These floating armored land masses created both defensive and offensive arrays in the sky of the divine plane.

The defensive array is a barrier that will remain unbroken unless the Leviathans behind it are all destroyed or all of them run out of power at once. The offensive array is just a systematic way of pointing their guns into the void such that every inch of the sky is accounted for.

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1607 Too Many Advantages. - Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1607 Too Many Advantages.

Chapter 1607 Too Many Advantages.

Not many are using the air-based fortresses since they are more expensive and will be the first target of the invaders. But Legion used them.

The Tree Father had made many death stars as a Celestial. They have since been upgraded, so they cannot be wasted. Unlike the pyramids he built when he was a Celestial, which have long been destroyed, the death stars can be summoned by him. And they will have the power of Supreme Origin gods because they are an extension of him. The clones summoned the death stars around each of them and above the defensive shell. These preparations, combined with the fact that the clones are scattered throughout the divine plane, ensure that they will not be eliminated at once. This way, they will always be able to regenerate, resurrect, and summon whatever they lost and get back into the thick of battle. Legion was among the first to finish setting up since they already had everything prepared. They were able to use the time before the fighting started to examine their surroundings and update themselves on the situation of the realm as a whole. The situation of the realm appeared within Legion's mind through their divine sense and Soverick's eyes. The Origin gods in the main plane of the realm were building fortresses on the ground around the opening of dungeons, while the divine plane is also full of a lot of actions.

One can note that the Origin gods are in a hurry. They are rushing about, trying to get their preparations done quickly. But one thing that is absent is anxiety or fear. Instead, buzzing excitement and hungry eagerness can be sensed from their actions and demeanor. Legion-1 said, "We are confident in victory."

Soverick agreed, "We have no reason not to be confident. We have all the advantages in this war. We will win."

Indeed, the high heaven realm has all the advantages here. They may be rushing to prepare, but they are not the ones that will be desperate in the upcoming battle.

As it is, the realm of high heaven is three steps ahead of the Tyrant Realm. There is a blockade around the Tyrant Realm, so they cannot receive reinforcements from their immortals. Their divine plane has been destroyed, so there is no defense for the Tyrant Realm. Last but not least, the demon gods are ravaging the Tyrant realm. The Tyrant realm, on the other hand, is just about to make an active move on the High Heaven realm since the era of conquest began. They are also at a disadvantage since they will not be able to resurrect in the realm.

Not only are they suppressed such that they can't teleport around the high heaven realm or use world fragments, they also have to face an enemy that can continuously replenish their numbers. Anyone with any good sense can tell that the upcoming battle is a losing battle for them. All of these things have happened even before the two realms have completely fused. When that happens, the dungeons will open. It is foreseeable that the High Heaven Realm will gain another advantage if the upcoming attack by the Tyrants on the realm fails. So if this attack fails, the high heaven realm will gain their seventh advantage, while the Tyrant realm will remain at zero. A normal person with all of this information can safely bet that the High Heaven Realm will win. A seer, on the other hand, can say with certainty that the High Heaven Realm will win. Soverick can see this, and so can many others. So it is understandable that no Origin god in the high heaven realm is afraid while the Tyrants are under a lot of pressure. The Tyrants have to break through the defense of the divine plane, enter the main plane, and use the dungeons to gain entry into their realm to reinforce it.

This is what they have to do to turn the tide of defeat in this realm war. The Origin gods of the high heaven realm, on the other hand, only have to defend the divine plane. They have all of these advantages, but they only have one thing to do. They just can't see how they will fail at it. As if the pressure of failure is not bad enough for the Tyrants, the repercussions of failure is also mounting pressure on them. They know that if they fail and the realm is destroyed, they will lose the support and guidance of the Will of the realm in their pursuit of the power of world gods. n/o/vel/b//in dot c//om

Those are the stakes here. It is not death for the losers, but it might mean eternal stagnation in their pursuit of power. Meanwhile, the origin gods of the High Heaven realm are looking forward to the battle so as to earn a lot of points before the era of conquest ends. One can imagine which side has the highest morale. This is the sixth advantage of setting the battlefield. Soon, the enemies could be seen appearing in the void of the realm of high heaven. The defenders are not working together as an army, but there is someone commanding them. That person is Mother High Heaven through the mission channel. Anyone can do anything, but it is best if they go along with her instructions. They will be able to earn higher contribution points that way. They also won't have their contribution points deducted for ruining her plans if they follow her lead. Right now, the main instruction is to wait for the air fortresses to make their first move. The second instruction is for the air fortresses and their weapons to wait for invaders to get closer before shooting. So everyone was waiting. But things didn't go their way. The invaders decided to take advantage of the greed of the defenders to secure some advantages for themselves.

Some Origin gods had noticed that the enemies didn't descend to fight immediately after they entered the realm. Instead, they stalled in the void just after the barrier of the realm doing something.

Chapter 1608: Eke Out A Living.

Some Origin gods with better eye sight were able to see that the invaders were bringing out some objects, but not many knew what they wanted to do. However, Mother High Heaven knew what their enemies were up to, and she was not going to allow them to complete it.

Her voice rang in the minds of the defenders with urgency, "They are trying to assemble weapons of mass destruction and fortresses in the void. Stop them!"

The main instruction changed. The air fortresses were given permission to fire. The silence in the world was destroyed immediately as weapons opened fire. A rain of fire fell in reverse on the divine plane. It rose from the white ground to the black sky.

Fireworks appeared in the dark void of the realm. It didn't matter if the enemies defended themselves or not; their positions were bombarded very quickly and repeatedly.

The weapons of the Leviathans fired in measured cycles so that there was no downtime between the assaults. Every inch of the sky was always on fire at every point in time because of it. This bombardment didn't stop at all. It continued for 4 months, nonstop.

During the first week of bombardment, the enemies tried to evade and defend. But the bombardment only increased over time. Its quantity and area of attack increased as the various floating fortresses learned to work together and as more fortresses were built to join them.

Mother High Heaven divided the void into sectors and assigned the various sectors to the various commanders and fortresses. This maximized their firepower, so the enemies had to attack to defend themselves or retreat.

They chose to retreat because they were not ready for battle yet. Unfortunately, staying in the void is also a waste of time. The seal on the realm is preventing the entry of weapons and artifacts into the plane.

It is the same reason why the realm lord didn't invade and attack the Tyrant Realm with his billions of world fragments on his own. They, too, can't make a lot of machines and bring them into the realm to fight with.

The attackers swore and grumbled, "This is too much. They already have so much advantage, and they are still being so miserly and greedy. They are not giving us any chance at all."

They were very angry, so they swore and complained a lot.

They know that the defenders are doing the right thing by not giving them the opportunity to build weapons, but they have a right to be angry. This is because the High Heaven Realm has too much of an advantage.

The fortresses and weapons they were trying to create in the high heaven realm are top grade artifacts at most. They can only harm Origin gods without Supreme Laws or world fragments. They are not like the death stars, which can harm Supreme Origin gods, and they can't be because they can't use anything like that under the suppression of the realm.

So it was not as if they were building a game changer. They were only trying to eke out a living. But that is somehow too much to ask. Apparently, they have to fight and lose miserably. It is frustrating to think about.

"Do they want us to throw ourselves at them without any defenses?"

A voice said from below the law matrix, "Stop complaining. All is fair in war."

That voice silenced complaints and grumbling. The invaders decided to be optimistic about the situation instead.

"There's nothing we can do. We can only sacrifice numbers for an advantage."

"Let us get more Supreme Tyrants first so that we won't be so helpless after we enter."

Months went by with this stalemate. Then the Tyrants heard that the realms had fused, and Origin gods of the high heaven realm were using it to enter the Tyrant realm. This move made the blockade created by the world gods of the Tyrant realm around the Tyrant realm to stop invaders useless.

Word also got to them that the demon gods are out of control in the Tyrant Realm due to the assistance of a black energy that the Tyrants couldn't get rid of. So the invaders had to push into the divine plane again.

The invaders rushed into the High Heaven Realm again. But this time, they didn't stop in the void. They were full of desperation and had a little confidence in their numbers. So they fell down to the divine plane like a tide, hoping to drown out the defenders.

It is a good thing that all of them have increased their defenses, because what welcomed them were explosions.

During the short break, the Origin gods of the High Heaven realm had gotten enough time to build a lot more massive weaponry in the air and on the ground. So their capacity for destruction had improved greatly. The cannons were like artillery. They rocked the sky and the earth of the divine plane with sounds of explosion.

The invaders were swallowed up by fire and thunder as soon as they returned to the realm. Most of them survived it, though. The scene of them dying en masse didn't happen. This is because the Supreme Origin gods were at the front, braving the firepower of the cannons.

They used their Supreme Laws to form a large network of barriers to protect the bulk of the army. This way, they were able to descend without much damage to their forces. They even had enough peace to start piecing together their own cannons.

The eyes of the clones narrowed when they saw this network of barriers. They saw a shadow of the seal of the gate of heaven in it. It reminded them of how many Supreme Powers were made to work together to seal the gate of heaven.

The major differences between them are that the Supreme Powers working together are not up to 100,000, and there is no large realm structure like the divine plane to support the network of barriers and cushion blows for it.

Chapter 1609: Special Tyrants.

Soverick observed solemnly, "So it is an innate ability. It is not something they achieved with the help of the divine plane."

Legion-5 said, "The Tyrant race is truly impressive. They can boost each other with their Supreme Laws. Even paragons can't do this as Origin gods. Could it be because they are paragons of both the living and the dead?"

The barrier they can see now pales in comparison to the one Aeternus corrupted and defeated. It is because the Tyrants didn't have enough time to set it up, and they don't have the support of a massive structure like the divine plane.

All of these make it so that they can't offset the damage to the divine plane. They have to bear it themselves, which means they can't heal the damage quickly enough.

Even so, it is still impressive that the Tyrant race can create something like this. Each Supreme Law is working together with the ones close to it instead of pushing them aside in a bid for supremacy.

It is beautiful to look at, and it reminds them of how they built the law matrix of the world fragment. But what they did can't compare to what they are seeing. In fact, they have never seen or heard anyone capable of doing something like this.

Paragons usually lose their POWER stat because mortals can't enhance immortals, and immortals can't enhance each other since their concepts will reject each other when they interact.

Even Origin artifacts, which are the body parts of immortals, are largely useless to Origin gods. Only something like a Supreme Law or a world fragment can enhance an Origin god. But both of those two can't enhance each other either.

But the Tyrants are evidently not part of this rule. Even Tyrants with concepts can work together and enhance each other instead of trying to eliminate each other. Their Supreme Tyrants can extend this cooperation between them to create a barrier that protects the weaker ones behind them.

Legion can only attribute it to a type of spiritual connection between paragons who gain power from both the living and the dead.

Legion-7 said, "They are many, but each one enhances the other, so all of them gain power from the presence of each other. It is not a shame that the Tyrant Realm fell to them."

Talking and admiring the view is one thing. It didn't stop Legion from trying to demolish the seal too. They did both of them with a critical eye, ensuring to spot the weaknesses in the barrier, admire it, and then exploit it for the glory of high heaven.

The barrier rendered any top-grade artifact or weapon that couldn't harm Supreme Origin gods. Only powerful weapons with Supreme Powers could put a dent in the barrier. But it was only that. The best they could do was put a dent in the barrier. They couldn't break it.

This didn't mean the barrier was unbreakable. Far from it. It had glaring weaknesses that were obvious to Legion and some other Origin gods. Those who could see these weaknesses took advantage of them quickly.

The barrier was like a law matrix. It connected nodes of Supreme Power. It could block most of the attacks because it could redirect all of its defensive power to any part of the barrier that needed it. But this made certain areas of the law matrix weaker.

The law matrix had finite defensive resources. By redistricting these resources, it made it difficult to be overwhelmed as a whole. The weaknesses it created, on the other hand, would have been harmless if they weren't spotted. But not only did Legion spot them, they even told Mother High Heaven about them.

Mother High Heaven was not helpless without the information they provided. She had begun to order 90% of the firepower to be directed toward a single spot. This caused the law matrix to resist, which caused every other area to become weakened. The remaining 10% were then able to capitalize on this weakness.

This tactic made the barrier predictable, but it wasn't as effective as Legion's constant snitching. With Legion-1's assistance, the remaining 10% could be directed toward a single spot of weakness instead of targeting some random area. This increased the effectiveness of the tactic by 100%.

Legion's death stars and many other Supreme Weapons directed their shots to areas of vulnerability. This created holes in the barrier for the normal artillery to take advantage of. So even top grade weapons that couldn't affect the barrier were put to use to destroy the things behind it.

As if that wasn't bad enough, the barrier tried to seal the holes that were created by redirecting its power to it. This succeeded, but came at the cost of ignoring the 90% firepower fixated at a certain spot. It didn't come as a surprise when another hole was created in the barrier.

Legion made it so that once a hole was created in the barrier, the usefulness of the barrier was halved. But this didn't destroy the barrier, and its usefulness was not halved. It was still able to protect the large majority of forces behind it simply by the virtue that it had limited what could be damaged to the holes.

So Legion shifted their targets to the Supreme Tyrants that made the barrier. They began trying to make the holes appear in front of the nodes so that they could destroy them when they became vulnerable.

This worked very well, but it was slow-going. Holes were created and repaired in a cycle. A Supreme Tyrant was successfully eliminated in some cycles, and in some, the holes missed them, so they had to start all over again.

This tactic slowed down the invaders, regardless of its success or failure. This is because they had to move at the same pace and maintain the same relative distance between each other to keep the integrity of their barrier intact.

In the case when a hole was created, they had to stop to let it mend. This drawback made their situation worse.

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1610: A Massacre. - Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1610: A Massacre.

Chapter 1610: A Massacre.

Since the holes were constantly being created, the procession became stalled. They became a literal sitting target for the invaders to fire at. They couldn't move or do anything, so they could only watch as their defensive tactic came undone.

Fortunately, or maybe unfortunately, they didn't have to wait too long. The Supreme Tyrants were 64,000 in number, and they needed about 100,000 cycles to eliminate half of their numbers. Each cycle was a second, so high heaven needed just 28 hours to destroy 50% of the structural integrity of the barrier.

But by that time, the resources available for the barrier had become too few to block a concentrated attack at a single spot. So the Origin gods of high heaven didn't need to scheme for vulnerabilities anymore. They just targeted each Supreme Tyrant in turn and turned them to ashes.

This shortened the time the Supreme Tyrants had to endure the humiliation of defeat. They could finally withdraw their Supreme Powers and focus them on themselves. Then they shot downward to fight it out with the defenders of the divine plane.

Most of them were shot down from the sky. Legion in particular, managed to get a few of them. They did this by concentrating the firepower of their death stars from different parts of the battlefield on a single target.

So firepower from different places all converged on a single Supreme Tyrant. This wasn't weird as many others were doing the same thing. They just weren't as coordinated as Legion.

But some Supreme Tyrants managed to reach the barrier of the floating fortresses. They began working at destroying it, which made them sitting targets.

The two armies had finally met. The fight went from a side passively taking a beating to both sides exchanging attacks and defending themselves. This increased the brutality of the fight. But most of the increase in brutality fell on the Tyrants because the land fortresses could finally fire.

The land fortresses had been waiting for a long time and were very prepared. All they needed was Mother High Heaven's permission to let loose. With the Tyrants battling the floating fortresses, they had come close enough for the land fortresses to take shots at them too. Their attacks passed through the barriers and struck the Tyrants trying to break them.

The two layers of offensive were finally put to work. This increased the pressure on the invaders by three times. What's worse is that they don't have a barrier to help them weather through it. They were overwhelmed very quickly.

It was messy, but clean. There wasn't even blood because the heat of the explosions burned everything. Explosions reaped their lives one after another, and there was no body left to mourn.

In fact, any body, intact or not, was not spared. This is because an Origin god is still alive as long as they have a body. They had to be destroyed completely for one to be certain of their deaths.

The invaders were dying in droves. It didn't make any difference that they had succeeded in building some artillery to assist them. Their impoverished firepower support didn't affect the overall situation at all.

The barrier created by the air fortresses couldn't be broken, but even if they managed to, they still had to break the divine plane and gain access to the high heaven realm below.

Then they probably have to fight the Origin gods situated below, guarding the dungeons, before they can gain access to the Tyrant Realm. The demon gods and Origin gods of high heaven realm there will fight them too.

They have to do these four things before their numbers run out. And it is only for a chance to turn the situation around from certain loss to probable loss in the era of conquest.

-The Abyss of The Tyrant Realm

News had finally reached the abyss of the happenings in the realm. Things could no longer be hidden from them. The broken divine plane and the spreading oceans of demon gods in the realm clued even the densest demon into the bad situation of the Tyrant realm.

The demons were roaring in excitement. They had long been suppressed by the Tyrants and can use this opportunity to get revenge. Even the demon gods were full of excitement. But more than that, they were already preparing to join in the fun.

First, they had to have a meeting about what they would do about the land of hope.

GREED was emotional. It said in awe, "Those demon gods from the high heaven realm are truly powerful. Look at what they have achieved in a short amount of time."

LIES also felt a slight fear. But it is only slight. Most of its emotion is joy. It said, "It is a good thing that demon gods can't eat each other, or I wouldn't feel safe at all."

GREED said, "We shouldn't be so sure yet. The fact that we didn't have any demon kings of kings doesn't mean they didn't."

LIES scoffed and said, "Don't try to scare me. Surely they would be smart enough to know to kill any demon king of kings before it grows."

GREED laughed at its joke. "I bet they did. I bet they did."

LIES changed the subject. "I am certain that the Tyrant Realm is doomed because of them. What do we do about the land of hope?" GREED replied, "It will be gone when the realm ends, so we should take full advantage of it before then. I suggest we eat all the livestock before we go and join the feast going on in the realm."

LIES asked, "That's a good idea. But how do we share it?"

GREED almost blew its top as it asked, "What do you mean, 'how do we share it?' We have to share it 60-40, according to our agreement. I'll take 60%, and you take 40%. I will fight you now if you dare to try anything funny."

Chapter 1611: A Special Mission For Aeternus.

GREED actually inflated as it gathered itself for battle. Its green waters began to shimmer and glow ominously.

It was LIES's turn to laugh. It said, "Fine. Fine. I was only joking. You take 60%. I will take 40%."

GREED deflated before saying, "That was not funny at all. You were insulting me."

LIES was indeed insulting the demon god of greed, but it is never going to admit that, so it changed the subject. It asked, "When are you leaving?"

GREED scoffed before replying, "I'm leaving immediately after we are done with this meeting and the looting. I can't wait anymore. I have to earn some merit for sabotaging the realm."

LIES then asked quietly, as if afraid its words would somehow leak to the target of discussion. "What about the god? We just can't leave it be, right?"

GREED considered the question. "That stupid god? It was a waste of time to count on him. His plan to spread his religion didn't work at all."

LIES shrugged, "You can't really blame him. No one expected the demon gods of the other realm to turn the Tyrant realm upside down. He can't spread any religion when the whole realm is infected by demon gods."

GREED insisted, "I want to blame him, so I will. Look at him at peace with himself, just strolling around the abyss as if he were on vacation. He wasted my time, and I feel so bad. But he doesn't feel bad at all that he failed. At least he doesn't show it. One might wonder if I am the one who wants the religion or the god."

LIES suggested, "How about this? Let's both attack him. Whoever kills him will get him. The other will have to work to sabotage the realm."

GREED agreed, "That's a good idea. Let's go now."

So they agreed to fight the god together and get rid of it. This is not a decision that was made in the moment. Both GREED and LIES are prepared to fight the god and then fight each other.

They have made a lot of preparations to ensure their victory. So both are confident in themselves. What's even better is that the god in question came to them immediately after they were done discussing his fate.

The two demon gods thought to themselves, "It is like food falling from the heavens into my waiting mouth."

Then they grinned at each other as if sharing an inside joke. But they also secretly thought, "Then I will get rid of this fool after it has been weakened by the battle."

They may be working together, but only before they try to attack each other. Their terms of cooperation are clear, but there's no way one of them is going to give up on the god, even if they fail to kill it.

GREED greeted the guest enthusiastically and said, "Welcome, my friend."

The Tree Father said to them, "I am amazed you two could show restraint for so long. I expected that one of you would try to attack me earlier, but none of you did."

LIES felt besmirched. "What are you talking about? We would never attack a guest."

GREED joined in too. "What kind of demons do you take us for?"

They said this while moving closer to their target. Both of them had flanked the seemingly ignorant god who dared to show his appetizing body in front of demon gods.

The Tree Father said to them, "It is your good luck that you didn't attack me alone. It is also your bad luck that you waited for me to be sure that there isn't a third demon god here before we make our move."

The two demon gods didn't understand what he was saying, but they understood that something wasn't right when a certain dark being appeared beside the Tree Father.

"Is that a Supreme Tyrant?" LIES asked.

Tyrants have dark skin, hence the question. But they soon realized that this wasn't a Tyrant when they felt its aura. It was not an aura of perfection. It felt more like the aura of a demon, but much worse.

In a weird way, this dark being reminded them of the god of life, but in a dark way. They both don't have a Supreme Law. But one feels harmless while the other is making danger alarms ring within their heads.

The threat was clear to the two demon gods. They didn't waste time at all and attacked. GREED's attack was direct. It struck with a whip of green energy as it moved closer to bound the strange creature. LIES also attacked, but from a distance. It shot what appeared to be bullets of energy at Aeternus.

Aeternus could have avoided the attack. In fact, he could have attacked first. But he waited for them to attack him first. He didn't even need to speak to goad them into attacking him. His mere presence was threatening enough. So they attacked him, which changed their identity from possible allies to enemies.

A mission from Mother High Heaven appeared, instructing him to kill the two demon gods as soon as he was struck by their attacks. Aeternus smiled when he saw it. It was going to be his pleasure to complete the mission.

The two demons had been surprised when their target stood still and let them attack him. Their surprise turned to dread when their attacks sank into his existence and was devoured.

They became certain that they had never seen anything like him when Aeternus attacked. Several bolts of Chaos energy shot at them while several black giant avatars appeared around Aeternus.

There was no Supreme Law in his attacks. Only the pure power of Chaos. The two demon gods finally realized why they felt so threatened by him. But even then, they couldn't understand what he was because demon gods created from demon kings of kings should have Supreme Laws. It should just be warped, and such demon god eaters should be mad.

Chapter 1612: Plan For The Abyss.

LIES and GREED defended the attack. They succeeded in defending themselves to a certain extent, but they lost energy to the corruption of Chaos when they made contact with each other.

LIES asked in agitation, "What sort of creature are you? Are you a world ender?"

This is the second time it has asked this type of question in a couple of months. The Tree Father has indeed brought many surprises to them.

The Tree Father didn't attack. He said to both sides, "It seems you have everything handled. Have fun."

Then he went back to the land of hope to assimilate it.

The demon gods were surprised by the attack, and were further outmatched by the power behind them. Aeternus could fight and kill many of PRIDE's clones. That was when he had just become a new demonic spark. Now he has grown stronger over the years. These two are not nearly enough to threaten him. They are not even enough to escape from him.

They understood that fact very soon. Which is why they tried other means of survival. LIES asked, "Why are you fighting us? Is it the god that you want? You can have him." GREED also suggested, "You can also have the land of hope."

They have never met this demon god, but they know of him. They know him now to be the demon god from the other realm that broke the divine plane. They have never met him, but they have seen his work. The same inextinguishable black energy that is troubling the Tyrants is the one troubling them now.

He is strong. That much is clear, so they do not want to be his enemies. Which is why they want to negotiate their safety with him. A normal demon god wouldn't listen to them at all. But demon god eaters are mad. Their Supreme Law and their good sense have become twisted from eating other demon gods, so they should have a shot at fooling him.

But Aeternus didn't reply. He had them surrounded by his avatars and ripped them apart little by little. It was especially pleasurable to do it knowing that he would earn contribution points for it too.

The only reason these two had lived until now was because they didn't try to attack the Tree Father and because he was busy messing up the Tyrant realm. If they hadn't made plans to kill the Tree Father, then the Tree Father wouldn't have noticed danger in his future.

The Tree Father wouldn't have sensed the danger and come here soon after so that they could fight far away from the first abyssal plane. After all, the Tree Father doesn't want harm to come to the abyssal plane he is about to assimilate.

GREED cursed him, "You won't get away with this."

Aeternus finally spoke. "Don't worry. I don't intend to leave. You can come at me again." Aeternus submerged the two of them in Chaos energy. He ripped away their power from their existence and destroyed them little by little. Their power nourished him, while their Supreme Law nourished his demonic spark and increased the power of his Chaos energy.

This is just the start of what they have planned for the abyss of this realm.

The Tree Father said to him after he was done, "I'm about to start. Guard me."

Aeternus nodded and entered his previously hidden state. Unlike other demon gods, he hasn't fused with his mark of sin. It means he can't use it for more than corrosion, but it also means he can seal himself off and therefore hide his aura from the world.

All he had to do was retract his energy from the world. Then use Legion-1's spatial manipulation to warp space around himself. He hid within the layers of space, so he couldn't be seen or sensed. Then he began to wander around the first abyssal plane to prevent anyone from interfering.

The first thing he did was get rid of the demon kings. They are of no threat to either of them, but they can interfere with what is about to happen, and Legion can't have that.

The Tree Father stood in the sky above the first abyssal plane while waiting for the demon kings to be killed. Then his figure broke apart to reveal his core. His core is a white sphere surrounding a multicolored core. His body formed into a ring of white fire around his core. This is the true form of a divine spark.

Next, he exerted a pull on the whole abyssal plane. He has spent months here, so he is very familiar with the structure and the center of gravity of the first abyssal plane. He has also made calculations about the kind of power required to uproot the whole abyssal plane without breaking it.

This is his true mission in the abyss. His proposal to spread his religion had always been a guise he wore to hide his true intentions. He came for the abyss itself.

His calculations reveal that it will require a lot of energy and power. Most importantly, he has to be careful when refining the abyssal plane. It might break if he isn't careful with the extraction or if someone interferes.

What he is about to do is momentous and probably unprecedented in the history of both realms. He couldn't make his goal clear to anyone watching, or they would try to stop him. This is especially true with the Supreme Alliance at their heel. Now it is almost too late for anyone to stop him.

The abyssal plane began to tremble gently at first. The placid purple sea of energy on its surface was also rippling. This ripple traveled from the first abyssal plane to every other plane.

The demon lords and demon kings in the abyss sensed the vibrations and were curious. They investigated, all to no avail. This is because they died as soon as they got close to the first abyssal plane.

It was only when the first abyssal plane rose beyond the boundary of the abyss that they realized what was happening. Soon, word spread throughout the abyss that someone was stealing the first abyssal plane.

Chapter 1613: Making Do With What's Available.

The demons are wrong, of course. The Tree Father is not just stealing the first abyssal plane. He is refining it into his core, and he will do more. They can be forgiven for that mistake because there's little difference between what he is doing and what they claim he is doing for now.

But they are wrong about his plans for the abyss. He doesn't plan to refine just the first abyssal plane. He plans to refine the whole abyss. That way, his world forge will be very strong. So not only is he stealing the first abyssal plane, he plans to steal every plane in the abyss too.

As a divine spark, his future is to become a world forge. He needs three things to achieve that. He needs a lot of cosmic energy, a world engine, and a world forge. When he has all three, his divine spark will light the spark in the forge, kickstart the world engine to power the world forge, fuse the two of them together with cosmic energy, and then he will become a maker of worlds.

A world forge is a phantasmic structure created with refined layers of space, energy, and matter. The best thing to use to create a world forge will be a lot of world fragments. Each world fragment he uses will make each layer of his world forge very powerful because of the world engine the world fragments possess.

The next best thing are divine planes. Divine planes don't have world engines, but they have the Authority of the Celestial Supreme. That is practically a substitute for world engines, so it will do as the second best. The third best are abyssal planes. Even ordinary planes are better than abyssal planes since they have life crystals.

Unfortunately, World fragments are expensive and not available for him to use. There are only two divine planes that are available to him, but he can't have one while Aeternus has destroyed the other. He also can't have any plans since they have either been infected by demon gods or can't be stolen for fear of Mother High Heaven.

This leaves the abyss for him to use. So he didn't target the abyss because he was being choosy. He targeted it because he had no choice. This is the best he could lay his hands on.

The first abyssal plane was soon lifted up into the sky. It was done slowly and carefully, so it was still intact. The white barrier around his core expanded rapidly. It pushed the ring of white fire away, so the ring also expanded. The white barrier expanded until it covered the first abyssal plane. Then it fused with it and began shrinking.

The first abyssal plane resisted the shrinking, so the ring of fire got to work on it. The ring of fire turned into a sphere that surrounded the white barrier and the first abyssal plane. The whole plane was then refined spiritually into a layer of the world forge.

Everything on the plane, including the people on it, was burned to death. Their souls were converted to divinity, which was used to enchant the refining process.

The resistance of the plane reduced, so it shrank slowly back to the multicolored orb at the center. It was refined into a ring of metal etched with runes of power. It became the first part of an artifact that will be used to forge worlds in the future.

This is all good for Legion, but more good things came along. The demons don't like intruders in the first place. They don't like intruders that are stealing from them even more.

Many demon kings didn't care about the theft, despite their hatred for intruders. They knew it was just a matter of time before the abyss was destroyed, and there's nothing to gain by stopping someone who's doing just that.

The Tree Father is only doing something the era of conquest will do to the abyss. So the demon kings were more interested in going to the Tyrant realm to wreck destruction and carnage before they ran out of time to do that. That will bring them tangible benefits. If they hadn't heard about the perpetrator being a god, none of them would have taken a step to interfere in the theft.

Apparently, some of the demon kings who had been on the first abyssal plane when the Tree Father came had spread word about the presence of a god. Not many believed it until they saw the culprit of the theft.

They heard it was a god that LIES and GREED had been hiding, so they came running. Even the ones who were cautious enough to ask the question, "Where are LIES and GREED?" couldn't overcome their resistance to something that could make them world enders. So they came in droves to their deaths.

None of them could get close to the god at all. Something was always cutting them off. The demon kings and demon gods didn't know that the god's act of stealing the abyss was bait for them.

Aeternus wanted to eat all the demon gods, but he couldn't go hunting after them because he didn't know where they were. Even Soverick's prediction couldn't find them reliably because of their Supreme Law, their chaotic nature, and the vast amount of energy that they carry. It was better to do something to attract them.

Their plan worked. Many demon gods came around to check out this god. They came to feed themselves to the waiting jaws of Chaos. This streak of unfortunate deaths didn't discourage the demon gods at first. The flesh of a god was that enticing.

Plus, there were certain demon gods that kept fanning the flames in the background. They instructed some demon kings to release certain enticing information about the god so that many other demon gods would encounter the calamity that they experienced.

Aeternus ate and ate. He ate as many demon gods came looking for trouble. The only demon god that didn't suffer was GREED from the high heaven realm. He took a look at Aeternus and ran away.

Chapter 1614: A Secret.

Not even the temptation of the Tree Father could make GREED stay. It prioritized its life above its GREED immediately it saw Aeternus.

GREED had heard a lot about Aeternus, so it didn't bother to fight when it confirmed what it heard through its sight. As they say, seeing is believing. It believed that it would die, so it ran.

Aeternus ate demon gods, while the Tree Father refined abyssal planes. Unlike the high heaven realm, the abyss of the Tyrant realm has fewer abyssal planes. Even so, there were more than 666 abyssal planes, as that is the minimum for the abyss. That means it will take a long time for him to refine them.

The first abyssal plane had cost him six months of time to inspect and analyze before the refinement. At that rate, the remaining 700 of them will cost him 350 years to refine. It is a long time, but he can't complain. After all, he is growing stronger by doing it.

Even Aeternus is growing stronger with every demon he kills. Demons weaker than demon kings can't nourish him much. But each demon possesses a mark of sin. That is the same number of marks that he has.

No matter how powerful a demon is, they will have the same number of marks of sin as a fledgling. They will have just one. Within that single mark of sin is the potential to become a demon god.

By stealing their marks of sin and sacrificing them to the crown of dominion, he can strengthen his own mark of sin significantly. It is the same thing that demon gods are supposed to do when their capacity becomes large enough. They will steal every mark of sin from demons with their sin. Then they will use the potential in all of them to evolve into world enders.

He doesn't have the capacity yet, and his mark of sin doesn't have the authority to pull the other marks to himself. But he can take those marks for himself by killing their wielders. And through the crown of dominion, he can achieve what he can't do himself.

Plus, he is not constrained by the demons of a particular sin. He can sacrifice every type of demon to his mark of Chaos. This way, his mark of sin increased in power by more than a thousand times. It was even changing within him. Legion was full of expectations for what it would bring forth.

The two clones let loose in the abyss without worry that the realm lord will be angry with them. They were even getting paid for their good work.

-GREED.

This demon god of the sin of greed from the high heaven realm took one look at Aeternus and turned around immediately. It forgot that it had promised to kill Aeternus whenever it had the chance and remembered that it should be somewhere else. But would Aeternus let it go? Not easily.

Aeternus chased after it and took away half of its body before it escaped. He succeeded because he aimed for the speed of light immediately he began chasing. He didn't think about the energy costs at all.

GREED, on the other hand, didn't think he would be so determined and wasn't willing to burn so much energy because the faster it pushed itself, the more energy it would have to spend.

So GREED was moving at a faster, but albeit conservative, speed for energy efficiency. Meanwhile, Aeternus was blazing after it right from the start. By the time GREED realized what was wrong, it was too late to accelerate fast enough to escape.

Plus, the Supreme Law of GREED is not good at speed, so even though it can reach the speed of light, its acceleration is slower than that of someone like LUST and PRIDE. Aeternus caught up to it and gave it a nice beating.

GREED finally realized just how terrifying Aeternus was. It had to sacrifice half of its body to escape. It divided its body into two and ran in different directions. This weakened it, but it allowed it to escape.

Things would have gone worse had it gotten entangled with Aeternus, but it still wasn't happy. Fortunately, it knew a secret that kept it positive.

It thought to itself, "Just wait. You will regret this soon."

It decided to be patient in the meantime and schedule revenge for the future. In the meantime, it made its way to the main plane of the Tyrant Realm. It is there that it is going to play its part as a traitor in this war. It is going to meet the Tyrants and offer them council on how to defeat their enemies.

The Tyrant Realm has been thrown upside down and is being ravaged. But ironically enough, the bulk of the power of the Tyrants is still preserved.

The divine plane might be gone, the abyss might be on its way to destruction, 97% of the main plane might have fallen under the control of demon gods, and billions of tyrants have died, but the 100,000 Supreme Tyrants are still alive. Most importantly, the Tyrant realm hasn't lost yet.

These 100,000 Supreme Tyrants with Supreme Power can still turn things around if they get the right information and the right tools. They don't have those things, but a traitor will be able to give them inside information and might be able to help them acquire the right tools to strive for victory.

GREED had come up with a plan that might help the Tyrants not only stop the demon gods but also manage to push them back. The Tyrants will be able to reclaim part of their lost land, if not all. But first, it has to convince them that it is not a spy for the High Heaven Realm.

GREED was surrounded by 10 Supreme Tyrants when it got to the meeting point. It didn't appear like a meeting at all. It looked more like an ambush.

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1615: Stubborn GREED. - Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1615: Stubborn GREED.

Chapter 1615: Stubborn GREED.

Things would have looked more dire had the remaining thousands of Supreme Tyrants come to surround GREED. Unfortunately, they couldn't all come here for this meeting. They have a realm to save, and this was all they could spare.

One of them said to GREED with a tone that brooked no rejection, "Prove to us that you are not a spy for your realm."

Another one joined in, "Yes. Swear an oath, or you are not going to leave this place at all."

GREED would have rolled its eyes if it had them. It didn't have them, so it made sure to express its disdain as it spoke. "Don't bother to threaten me. This is just my clone, and the only thing you can do to it is to destroy it. If I were a spy, then your threats would mean nothing to me. I am not a spy, and it still doesn't mean anything to me."

"We are not stupid. We know that the threats we make can't actually threaten you. If not for LUST, we wouldn't have bothered to meet you at all. But we have met you, and so we must receive a token of sincerity from you. It may not threaten your life, but we will still go through with our threats if you don't give us that token."

GREED said stubbornly, "Don't bother to ask for an oath. I won't make it, no matter what. I refused to swear one in my realm. That's why I am here speaking with you."

A Supreme Tyrant insisted, "That's your realm. The Tyrant Realm is different. We must get the oath from you, or your clone is gone."

GREED sneered and said, "You must have some information about the actions of our realm lord to stamp out betrayal in the realm. You must know that those actions are why the demon gods of my realm attacked the Tyrant Realm en masse and so enthusiastically. I will tell you now that I didn't take the oath the other demon gods took. I can swear on that. I will also tell you that I was the odd one out in the whole high heaven realm, including its abyss. And yet they couldn't do anything to me. If I was able to survive in the high heaven realm after turning my back on them, what do you think you can do to me?"

GREED's words lessened their wariness of it. But only a little. The Supreme Tyrants were not stupid. They noticed something amiss in what it said.

"It is true that killing this clone will do little to you, but we still insist on doing it anyway. Your oath to prove you didn't swear the oath of other demon gods will not change our stance on that. You might have sworn other oaths, for all we know."

GREED shrugged mentally and said boldly, "Maybe I have. Maybe I haven't. You will have no way to know because I will never swear an oath to never betray you. I want the freedom to be able to betray you, and nothing will change that."

The Supreme Tyrants did not like the sound of that. "It seems we have decided. We must destroy your clone."

GREED didn't back down. "Indeed, we have. But before you destroy this clone, listen to what I have to say. You can choose to follow it or not. If you follow it, then my plan to sabotage the High Heaven Realm would have worked. If not, then I would have sacrificed this clone for nothing."

The Supreme Tyrants communicated amongst themselves before speaking. They know of the quest given to the demons to sabotage their realms in the era of conquest. It made them want to consider what GREED has to say.

So they said, "Go ahead."

GREED wasn't surprised by their answer. They could have attacked it instead of arguing amongst themselves about whether to allow it to speak or not. It is clear to GREED that they are desperate and open to any suggestion or assistance. They just want to be sure it is not a spy.

Even if they had disagreed, it would still have said what it wanted to say before this clone was destroyed. Their permission has only made things easier and the Tyrants more receptive to what it has to say. After all, they could have blocked out its words if they didn't give it permission and if they didn't want to listen. That's extreme but possible. If it had happened, then its plan would be less effective.

So GREED said, "If the Tyrants are to turn the situation around, then they must have the willingness to sacrifice themselves for the realm. They must be willing to unite and consolidate their power."

A Supreme Tyrant asked in confusion, "What do you mean?"

"What do I mean?" GREED asked with mirth. "Surely you jest. You must know what I mean. Why are you asking as if I have suggested something never heard before?"

The Supreme Tyrant who asked became angry. It said, "Don't speak in riddles. Say what you want to say clearly. We are already consolidating our strength. What more can we do?"

GREED replied, "Now you are just acting stupid."

The angry Supreme Tyrant attacked GREED, but it was blocked by the others.

They placated it, "Hold on. Let it speak. You will have your chance soon."

GREED laughed but decided to be straightforward. It said, "I am speaking of the Taboo, which must not be spoken."

The Supreme Tyrants bristled visibly. Especially the angry one. It couldn't contain its anger at all. But it was restrained so it could only point at GREED and screech in anger, "You dare to speak of it?"

GREED continued without care, "This situation is different from other times when someone has tried to attempt it. A lot of you are connected to the realm right now in a way you have never had. If all of you Supreme Tyrants perform the Taboo, then you will surely be able to acquire the strength of a world god within the realm. No one will be able to stop you then."

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1616: Mad And Desperate. - Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1616: Mad And Desperate.

Chapter 1616: Mad And Desperate.

The Tyrants were quiet as they considered that suggestion. But the angry one became the voice of reason. It asked, "How did you know about the secret Taboo if you are not a spy?"

GREED asked in return, "How do I know about the one thing that is Taboo for the Tyrant race? Every demon god knows it. Or have you forgotten that they invaded your people and the land they dwell on? All the knowledge and secrets of your race have been laid bare to the world. Even though very few Tyrants know what the true Taboo entails, it is not difficult to ask around. I was smart enough to do that and come to you to suggest it."

"And stop accusing me of being a spy already. You have nothing to hide, and you are losing here. It is not even close. You will definitely lose. What does the high heaven realm need a spy for when the outcome of this realm war is so clear to see? Besides, you have already determined to destroy my clone. It doesn't matter if I am a spy or not. Just shut up and listen."

The Supreme Tyrant actually sagged and wailed. It was crying and bawling its eyes out. It kept muttering, "Look at how low we have fallen. We don't even deserve to be spied on."

GREED sneered while the other Supreme Tyrants tried to console him.

It is a serious matter for a Tyrant to cry. They don't usually cry at all. Not even death can make them cry. It is because they don't feel pain. But this time, something seemed to have broken through the mental defenses of the Tyrant to make it cry. The other Tyrants didn't make fun of it like they usually would. They were all sad, too.

GREED couldn't take it anymore. It said, "Hello. I have places to be. Just kill me if we are done here."

A Tyrant said, "The Taboo might not be a bad idea."

Another Supreme Tyrant spoke. It said, "We must be mad to consider it."

Someone interjected, "Or desperate."

Another one added, "We are desperate and mad."

GREED interrupted them, "Either way, you have no choice, and you must know it. You are failing to keep your realm intact. The reinforcements you are expecting are failing to break through the high heaven realm. More enemies are invading the realm by the day. You are losing, and you know it. Everyone knows it. This move will grant you victory, so you must do it."

The Supreme Tyrant who was first angry and then sad, became angry again. It said, "That is enough from you. We don't want to hear about our dire circumstances from you. We have not fallen so low as to want advice from a demon."

GREED retorted, "And yet, here we are. It is not about what you want. It is about what you need. You need to hear me say it, and you need to perform the Taboo. Only when things have gone your way can you afford to get whatever you want."

One of them asked GREED sternly, "Do you have anything more to say?"

The other Supreme Tyrants tightened their posture around the demon god, waiting for its answer.

GREED replied confidently, as if it didn't see their actions, "No. That is all I have to say." The angry Supreme Tyrant said, "Good."

And they attacked GREED together. GREED burned all its energy for one attack against a Supreme Tyrant. It managed to break through its defense and kill it with a single strike. It didn't bother to try and use it as a node to infect the realm. It didn't have any more energy to do that. For the first time, GREED was content with a single thing.

The death of this Supreme Tyrant was the first of its kind throughout the era of conquest. The other demon gods hadn't been willing to sacrifice the energy required to kill them. They had been content with using energy to withstand their attacks rather than consuming a massive amount of it to kill a single Supreme Tyrant.

Who would have thought that the most miserly demon god would be the one to make the sacrifice to kill a Supreme Tyrant? It was out of place, and it certainly caught the Tyrants off guard. Most importantly, it reminded them that the option of the Taboo might not be their saving grace forever.

Maybe they thought they could always execute the Taboo any time they wanted. Maybe they were waiting to become more desperate before taking such drastic actions. But now, they have lost one of them.

The power they will gain from 99,999 Supreme Tyrants executing the Taboo will obviously be less than what they would have gained had they used 100,000. This power will continue to decrease as more of them die. Then the Taboo will become a desperate action that might not save them instead of being their saving grace and trump card.

So the death of the Supreme Tyrant put pressure on them to make a decision quickly. At the very least, they stopped being reckless with their lives. After all, they are not true immortals.

If not for their close affinity with the realm through their divine ability and the title that the realm granted them, they wouldn't have the power of Supreme Origin gods. Now that their mortality has been exposed, they have to cherish their lives and their last cards more. GREED, on the other hand, had completed its mission. It had to sacrifice a clone, but it was already prepared for it. That's why it didn't care that Aeternus took half of the clone.

The half that Aeternus took could subdue a plane. So it was as large as CARNAGE's clone that covered the whole Lumen plane. But GREED didn't feel the pain. After all, it was going to lose everything after the meeting. If there is a detriment, it is that it didn't manage to kill more than one Supreme Tyrant because of the energy it lost to Aeternus.

Chapter 1617: The Giant Black Elephant.

-The Demon's Dilemma.

The demons of the high heaven realm were having a party in the Tyrant Realm. They had everything they needed to have a party. They had a joyful matter to celebrate, food and drinks to celebrate with, and a large, prime piece of meat to eat all day long.

What could stop them from celebrating? Nothing apparently. They have been partying for years now. It has been about 50 years since they began partying. One can imagine just how big this party is. But whatever one imagines will fall short because this is a grand party that the demons have no intention of stopping for the next thousand years.

The demons of Tyrant Realm, on the other hand, are not so cheerful. At least not the demon gods. For the demon kings and the rest, the era of conquest wasn't going to turn out well for them, regardless of the outcome. They would lose out completely. The demon gods, however, will have a chance to become world enders.

Only one of them will gain this chance, and that demon god will be the one with the highest contribution towards the loss of the realm. So what the demon gods should do is clear. They ought to sabotage the Tyrant Realm, and there is a good opportunity to do so. They can join the party going on in the realm and make a lot of contributions to the destruction of the realm.

They will enjoy themselves at the party while working towards becoming world enders. It is killing two birds with one stone. It is a hobby that pays. So the demon gods of the Tyrant Realm were partying too. But then a certain god began stealing the abyss.

It is not something anyone could have imagined or expected to happen. There are just too many absurdities in the matter. First of all, a god dared to enter the abyss. Secondly, the god began to steal an abyssal plane. Thirdly, the god has stolen 31 abyssal planes.

The fourth and most absurd and infuriating part of this entire thing is that this god is still in the abyss, stealing the abyssal planes. If they don't know any better, they would think the god actually plans to steal the whole abyss.

Unfortunately, they have to assume the worst because this god has shown no signs of stopping the theft. It is as infuriating as it is impressive.

If this matter didn't concern them, the demon gods would be impressed. However, it does concern them. It is practically linked to their livelihood.

This matter is of great importance to them because if there is no abyss by the time the Tyrant Realm loses the era of conquest, then it will not be destroyed. If the abyss is not destroyed, then its energy will not surge into the demon god with the highest contribution. If that doesn't happen, then no demon god will become a world ender.

So the theft of the abyss means the loss of their chance to become world enders. This understanding came late to them. It is not their fault, actually. After all, this has never happened before. Even the powerful Tyrants failed to take over a single abyssal plane.

Actually, they didn't consider it at all until 10 abyssal planes had gone. It was then that a demon god asked, "Wait a minute. If there is no abyss, can we still become world enders?"

That was the thought provoking question that made them argue and come to the realization that not only is the god stealing the abyss, it is also stealing their future. As if that isn't enough reason to go and stop the god, there is also the fact that killing and absorbing the god means becoming a world ender.

So this god alone represents two different opportunities to become world enders. It is too much motivation for them to stop the god. It made the demon gods rally their numbers again to stop the god. Unfortunately, there was a slight problem.

A demon god asked about the giant black elephant in the realm. "What about that demon god of Chaos protecting the god?"

It is not as if they haven't tried to kill the god before. They have certainly tried, and many times at that. But they have failed every time, all because of the powerful demon god protecting the god.

This was far before they knew the importance of the abyss. But now that the abyss has become more important and it has become necessary to get rid of the god. Unfortunately, the problem that stopped them before, when they didn't care about the theft of some abyssal planes and only wanted to eat a god, hasn't disappeared.

In fact, that problem has only gotten bigger, just like the importance of stopping the god. This demon god is so powerful that they are calling him a demon eater, the fiend god, or the giant demon reaper.

That's how big Aeternus has gotten from all the eating. Even demon gods, who can cover a whole plane with their bodies, think he is a giant. He normally assumes the size of 100 kilometers to appear harmless. But they know better. They have seen his hand stretch for thousands of kilometers to grab a fleeing demon god.

The demon gods clamoured among each other.

"We can't even fight the god at all, much less stop him, and it is all because of the demon god."

"If we don't beat him, then we can forget stopping or having the god of life."

"But what can we do? We are not even a match for the demon gods from the High Heaven Realm, much less this enigma."

None of them could answer that question, so they were silent.

This is not the first time they have had this meeting. In the past, there have been a lot of suggestions, particularly from LIES and GREED, on how to defeat the fiend demon god. They have tried a lot of those suggestions, and they have all ended in failure.

GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? #Chapter 1618: A Joke Or A Scheme. - Read GREED: ALL FOR WHAT? Chapter 1618: A Joke Or A Scheme.

Chapter 1618: A Joke Or A Scheme.

They had surrounded the demon god eater with all of them, hoping to overwhelm it or wear it down. At the end of the day, it was as if they had thrown good food at it. It had grown stronger and reduced their chances of turning the situation around to nothing.

That experience taught them why they killed every demon king of kings they found. Demon god eaters are better eliminated when they are young and weak, not when they are capable of participating in the theft of the abyss.

Fortunately, there are smart and cunning demon gods among them. They are stumped, but they still have moves to make. LIES still had a suggestion about what moves they should make.

LIES said, "We have two choices. One is to wait. We can accumulate energy silently over a long time during the era of conquest and return stronger to beat the herald of chaos, or whatever he calls himself."

"That will take a lot of time and might not work because there's nothing stopping the herald of chaos from also growing stronger in the meantime. It might also be too late by the time we are ready to save the abyss. There might be no abyss waiting for us anymore."

"The advantage of this decision is that if we succeed, then we will get to keep both the god and the opportunity of the abyss. The disadvantage is that if we lose, then we will lose everything. We will waste time and energy just to lose the abyss and the god."

"The second option is to enlist the help of the demon gods from the High Heaven Realm. I am sure none of them can resist the temptation of a god who can make us evolve. They will surely work together with us, and we might be able to defeat the herald of chaos with our combined might."

"The disadvantage of this choice is that we might lose the god to them. But we will get to keep the opportunity of the abyss for ourselves. After all, they are invaders. They can't compete with us for it. Only one of us can earn it."

LIES asked them, "So which option do we pick?"

It could have presented this decision to them earlier, 50 years ago, when they first started throwing themselves at the herald of chaos. But it didn't because it wanted the other demon gods to suffer at the hands of Aeternus just like it did. After all, the demon gods are competitors, not friends. They can't all become world enders even with two opportunities to do so.

The decision would have also been rejected back then because the demon gods would want to give up the god. They didn't know how fearsome the herald of chaos was, so they were still full of optimism. That optimism had been ground down by dread now, so they took this decision seriously.

The demon gods considered the decisions and agreed to get the help of the demon gods from the high heaven realm. They went together to speak with the demon gods. The one they met with first was WRATH.

WRATH asked them excitedly, "You have a god that can turn a demon god into a world ender in this realm? I have never heard of such a god. Where is it?"

LIES replied, "It is in the abyss."

WRATH was about to say, "Let us go."

But then it stopped in confusion and asked, "In the abyss? Which abyss? Yours or mine? Wait a minute. Is this god suicidal? How would it dare to enter any abyss?"

LUST replied, "We are not lying. It is truly in our abyss, and it is stealing the abyss."

WRATH said calmly, "So not only is the god in the abyss, it is also stealing abyssal planes brazenly. This is not a matter of being suicidal or stupid. This god must be very powerful to do so. Or you wouldn't have come to me at all."

WRATH isn't stupid. It is just rash. Even so, it was able to notice the peculiarities of this event. Most importantly, it knows that demons are not kind. They wouldn't have brought this information to it if they could monopolize it.

It said to them, "If all of you couldn't subdue this god and monopolize it, then that means it must be very strong. You better tell me what's really going on here. Are you planning to lure me into the abyss and then gang up on me to kill me? Is this story bait to scheme against me?"

WRATH became wary immediately. All of these smell like a scheme to target it. These demons shouldn't have a reason to target it since they should be helping it destroy the realm. But it also shouldn't be helping the high heaven realm win the war, and yet, here it is. So anything is possible nowadays.

What also fueled its caution is the fact that it has never heard of a god that can help a demon god evolve, and it has never heard of a god that can fight a demon god. But not only can this god fight a demon god, it can fight several of them and defeat them.

As if this is not laughable enough, this kind of god has never appeared in the high heaven realm, where there are a lot of gods. At the very least, it has never heard of such a god.

But they want it to believe that such a god appeared in this realm where there should be no gods. It is a joke for it to believe them. If it is a joke, then it is not laughing because it doesn't find this funny.

If this is not a hoax, then it might very well be a trap for it. It is a trap with a good bait. Unfortunately, the bait is not believable or they would have succeeded in fooling it.

Chapter 1619: Perplexed And More Perplexed.

WRATH warned them, "I'm telling you now. Don't think that I am easy to fool or that you can defeat me easily. I will be sure to take down at least 3 of the 5 of you with my current clone. And there's still more of me in this realm to go around."

There's not much difference between demon gods in terms of power. What affects their strength the most is the amount of energy they possess, and WRATH's current clone has the same amount of energy as all five demon gods of the Tyrant Realm, if not more. So its threat must be taken seriously.

If not for the fact that it will be fighting all of them at once, it would be able to take down four one by one before its energy level runs too low to threaten the last one.

The demon gods of the Tyrant Realm went ahead and explained the situation. They were not planning to fool WRATH before, so they didn't hide anything anymore.

"Actually, we don't know the strength of that god because there is a demon god protecting him. This demon god calls himself the herald of chaos. It is very strong and unreasonable to negotiate with. We have tried to beat it, but..."

WRATH snorted. "If you mean Aeternus, then you lot must have lost and you must have lost a lot,"

The demon gods displayed Aeternus's current form to WRATH. His large, dark form, which dwarves planes, appeared in all its glory in WRATH's mind.

Then they asked, "Is this the Aeternus you speak of?"

WRATH's eye would have bulged if it had eyes. "Aeternus has grown so big. What has he been eating?"

Then the answer to its question dawned on it. "Ah yes. He has been eating you fools."

One of them asked WRATH, "Do you know this Aeternus very well?"

WRATH laughed as it replied, "Of course I do. He is notorious in our realm. I and many others have fought him many times. We even know his weakness. But don't bother to ask me to join you. If Aeternus is involved in this, then I am not interested."

"We don't intend to have only you join us. We want to call on every demon god from your realm to join in. If every demon god from the two realms combined their might, we might be able to seal this Aeternus."

WRATH didn't budge. "I am still not interested."

This statement shocked the demon gods.

"There is an opportunity to become a demon god at stake here, and we have a good chance at it."

But WRATH didn't care. "Please leave. I am very busy here."

The demon gods were bewildered. They expected a demon god as powerful as WRATH to be very confident in the combined might of all the demon gods against a single demon god, so they were both disappointed and perplexed.

They left, though. They had to when WRATH began to prepare to send them off violently.

WRATH watched them go with a sneer. It felt some amusement at the fact that Aeternus troubling someone else for a change. But mostly, it was content with what it was doing.

The demon gods of the Tyrant realm would never understand why it is not tempted by the god because it already has an alternative. They don't know that alternative because no one has mentioned the abyssal coalition to them.

This abyssal coalition has given it the opportunity to acquire a world spark. Currently, it can already afford it. Most demon gods that participated in the invasion of the realm can. So it already has a way to become a world ender. What it is doing right now is enjoying itself. That's why the invasion of the Tyrant realm has become a party to them. It is not a war anymore.

The demon gods of the Tyrant realm don't know why they are backing up the wrong tree, so they approached other demon gods for cooperation. Their perplexity deepened when every demon god they approached refused to join in. SLOTH didn't even listen to them.

The demon gods that did listen to them were first excited when they heard about the god, but they lost their enthusiasm when they heard that it concerned the herald of chaos. They also displayed particularly weird emotions when they displayed Aeternus's current large form. They, above all else, knew how powerful and formidable Aeternus was when he was more than a thousand times smaller than a powerful demon god. Now he is many times bigger than when they first participated in the era of conquest. How can they not lose interest?

In a normal situation, size is everything to demon gods. This is because the bigger they are, the more energy they have at their disposal. But Aeternus is not ordinary. He already had a lot of energy when he was small, and he could fight many demon gods bigger than him. So they had to give up now that things have developed to this level.

PRIDE even became angry when he saw Aeternus's new form. It said, "See what you have done now, you fools? You have created a problem for everyone with your incompetence."

A demon god asked, "If this herald of Chaos is problematic right now, why don't we work together to eliminate it before it becomes too late?"

PRIDE yelled at them, "SCRAM!!!"

They actually proposed a good idea, and it is tempted by it. But the fact that it needs the help of others to defeat Aeternus doesn't sit well with it. And the fact that even if it overcomes its discomfort, this plan is unlikely to succeed because these fools have made Aeternus stronger by offering their flesh to it, makes it very angry.

These two things made PRIDE yell at them to leave. The demon gods of the Tyrant realm had to leave. They left in bewilderment and surprise. They had to ask themselves, "Why are they so scared of him? I am sure that all of us combined should have a lot more energy than one demon god."

Chapter 1620: More Contribution.

Of course, the demon gods of the Tyrant realm were wrong about the assumption that all of them and the demon gods of the High Heaven realm should possess more energy than Aeternus. In fact, they would be wrong to think that all of the abyss of both realms combined possess more energy than him.

But what else they were wrong about was that the demon gods of the high heaven realm wouldn't have fought Aeternus even if he hadn't gained a lot of power recently. They don't want to break the pacts of the abyssal coalition now that the era of conquest has started.

They were not going to attack him, despite the fact that they hate him a lot and know one of Aeternus's weaknesses. This weakness is that he has only one body, so he will die permanently if they manage to kill him.

So they have a real chance at eliminating him for good. But they also know of many of his strengths, such as his powerful Supreme Law.

This is a Supreme Law that has no weakness. It can even break a barrier between realms. Aeternus has thoroughly shown the superiority of his supreme law over theirs.

This is a strength that becomes inviolable when combined with the growing suspicion that he has infinite energy. PRIDE claims he does, but Aeternus might not actually have infinite energy. As excuses for defeat go, it is believable, reasonable, and deadly if true.

But the demon gods of the Tyrant Realm don't know these, so they were understandably angry and unhappy. They complained and cursed their complacent counterparts for their inaction.

A demon god said with disdain, "They are full of energy and have become full of themselves. That is probably why they faltered and let a demon king of kings become a demon god. Even now, they are still too proud and think themselves undefeatable because of their recent success in devouring the Tyrant realm."

Another snorted and said, "What's so great about them? Is it not only energy? Just because they had the freedom to attack anything in their realm, they felt they could be full of themselves. We too would have been strong had we gotten the opportunity they had."

Another one complained, "Even their demon kings are ripe with energy and power. I wonder what kind of realm the high heaven realm is if it can raise demons like this. Most of it has probably been devoured by the demons. That's probably why only the demon gods came out of Amageddon to attack the divine plane."

This complaint gave one of them an idea. It said, "Why don't we attack their demon kings and the other demons of their realm? Let's use that to steal some of their energy."

This idea was too tempting for them. Soon, another one spoke in favor of it. "It will be easy too. Just because we can't attack the big fish doesn't mean we can't eat the small fish."

And so they agreed to attack the defenseless and weak demons of the high heaven realm. It is because of the energy they possess.

The demons of the high heaven realm truly have a lot of it. There are a lot more of them than those from the Tyrant Realm. Their number and size of their demon gods show how well the demon gods of the high heaven realm have done for themselves. While the demon gods will be a tough bone to crack, the invading demon kings will be supple and easy pickings.

Or so they thought. They did succeed for a while in reaping the lives of demon kings from the high heaven realm. But that decision turned out to be a bad idea because it gave the demon gods of the high heaven realm reason to kill them.

Earlier, there was no mission to kill the demon gods of the Tyrant Realm from Mother High Heaven because they didn't threaten the invasion of the realm. In fact, they were allies who helped the invaders by sabotaging their realm. It is why the demon gods of the High Heaven realm didn't attack them, even though they were stronger.

The demon gods of the high heaven realm would rather focus on something more productive, like attacking the realm, instead of creating enemies for no benefit. After all, they don't gain anything from attacking other demon gods. In fact, they lose out instead in the form of energy.

But now that the demon gods of the Tyrant Realm have turned on the invaders, they have become sources of contribution, which the demon gods of the High Heaven realm scrambled to acquire.

It is the same thing that happened with Aeternus. Except this time, Mother High Heaven is determined to wipe out the demon gods of the Tyrant realm instead of warning them off.

It wasn't a fight. The demon gods of the High Heaven realm chased their enemies all over the realm. They had almost twice the number of demon gods and more than five times the amount of energy stored in clones on their side. So it wasn't a contest at all.

The demon gods of the Tyrant Realm had nowhere to hide. They had only two choices which were to leave the realm completely or work together with the Tyrants. They certainly can't hide in the abyss because of the herald of chaos.

For the first time since the start of the era of conquest, the demon gods of the Tyrant Realm felt what it meant to be on the losing side. Some of them managed to acquire refuge with the Tyrants, while the rest were hunted down by the demon gods of the High Heaven realm and Aeternus.

Not only that, Legion began to earn contribution points for destroying the abyss now that it serves a function in eliminating the demon gods for good. This made Legion soar to the top 0.1% of every contributor to the era of conquest.
