Chapter 61

“My King, there is another attack by the rogues!” The Royal Gamma shouted as he wanted to inform his King as soon as possible.

Hearing the royal gamma’s hurried voice, Micah immediately rushed to the door before throwing a look at Abby.

Abby followed the King to the door and as soon as the door was opened, she could Dax closing his eyes with both hands. Only he was peeking through the gaps between his fingers.

This royal gamma could turn any situation to his favor and behave mischievously!

Abby couldn't help but grumble inwardly, noting that Dax was only being like this because the King shut the door in his face that morning.

On the other hand, Micah couldn't be bothered with his antics as he brushed the royal gamma's hands off his own face as he posed a question to him.

“What did you say?” The King asked, leaving no room for tardiness.

“Right, there was another attack by the rogues,” Dax said, turning completely serious in the face of his sovereign’s no nonsense attitude.

“Where?” Micah asked and then proceeded to listen to Dax’s report, where the royal gamma recited what he learned from their warriors word to word.

Apparently, there had been another attack by the rogues, but this time they targeted a neighbouring pack of this Red River pack and were even more brazen than the few times they tried. to make noise thus far.

There were actually several civilians who lost their lives this time, which deviated from their modus operandi until now.

They never claimed any lives, but it changed with the attack this time.

Hearing the report, Micah couldn't help but ball his hands.

These pests were getting hard to control.

After contemplating for a quick second, Micah left with Dax to gather his own warriors along with a few warriors under Alpha Samuel to go to the scene, where the attack happened that night.

Even though it was just after midnight, Micah didn't hesitate to leave right away.

He couldn't care less about sleep and rest when those rogues started running rampant under someone's command.

Calpin.

He needed to find more about this man. What was his motive to make these rogues attack several places in his kingdom? What did he want?

He needed to find out answers to all these questions to stop him. After all, stopping him became necessary to him when he started losing the lives of his own people, However, Micah didn't want to go as the King of the werewolves, which could alert the enemy and lead to them escaping.

"We are going incognito, Micah decided, and the royal gamma grinned at his idea.

Before leaving, Micah went back to inform Abby of his plan, but the girl was a little afraid after hearing that he would only bring a few warriors with him.

"It's not ideal to bring too many people with me, little one," the King could only convince his little mate.

Once his little one understood how moving in large groups might not be beneficial for them as it would give away their disguise, the King left with Dax and a few warriors to the Black claw pack.

On

On the other hand, Abby knew Micah could protect himself and all his people, but she still didn't. like this idea of his, because the Black Claw pack in question was more than six hours away from this Red River pack.

It would be too late to know about anything that happened there, and even more late to send reinforcements...

"My King, there are a few rogues around the small square two streets away from here,” one of the guards informed Micah as soon as he was done patrolling in this pack.

They just got here after running for six hours straight, but the King didn't let them barge into the pack without any plan.

As such, this small group of fifteen was waiting near the southern border of this pack while Dax went inside with two warriors to scout around the area.

In the early morning fog, Micah could be seen wearing a common man's attire while his face was covered with a cloth.

Meanwhile, the warriors that came with him wore casual clothes with no masks on, as they weren't as noticeable as the King of this kingdom.

“And they seemed to be planning to attack another part of this pack,” the second guard completed. their report, before waiting for the King's further instructions.

Micah gritted his teeth when he learned how those rogues were planning to attack the daily market the moment the sun rose above the horizon.

He quickly made a decision and ordered three of his men to stay behind at the border an they could relay information to his warriors if something happened while they were inside.

However, just as they dispersed to mingle with the crowd, the royal gamma could be seen working to the King in a leisurely manner.

Micah almost slapped him on the head when his mischievous third in command walked toward him with a grin on his face, while his disguise was nowhere to be seen.

Before the King could reprimand the royal gamma for being so careless and exposing himself, Dex actually mind linked him.

[1 have a surprise,] the royal gamma didn't even hesitate to drag the King away from the market, where the attack was going to happen.

Abby couldn't sleep all night as she tossed from one side to the other side on this large bed while counting the threads in her woolen blanket.

“Lady Abby, when did you wake up?”

Alyssa, who just entered the room to wake her lady up, was startled to see Abby leaning against the headboard with this frown evident between her eyebrows.

“Just now,” Abby immediately lied, not wanting to hear her maid nag at her.

Hearing her answer. Alyssa didn’t suspect anything and helped her to get ready for the day.

“Reyna is taking care of your breakfast,” Alyssa told Abby when she asked where the girl was.

As if the girl heard her, Reyna could be seen stepping into the room a moment later with a tray in her hands.

en while eating. Abby's whole mind was on Micah and how they were faring.

After two hours of doing nothing but staring out of the window, Abby suddenly jumped to her feet standing both Alyssa and Reyna

“You don't have to strain yourself, my lady. Both of us can bring whatever you need to your feet,” Reyna said.

“I want to talk to Mirella,” the girl told her maids, leaving them stunned.

Yes, she wanted to go and meet Mirella to talk about a lot of things, like her magic and how to control it better.

Also about Calpin. For some reason, she felt it was too important to focus on this man her mother told her about..

She could tell Micah didn't really think too much when she told him how her mother repeatedly warned her about this Calpin guy. Albeit through lullabies.

She felt this nagging feeling at the back of her mind that this wasn't really a simple coincidence of names.

So she decided it was better to go and talk with Mirella about it since she was a witch as well, who could use magic, just like her mother and herself.

On the other hand, Alyssa and Reyna didn't know how to react as they gaped at Abby.

Mirella? That witch?

Her maids couldn't help but look at each other when Abby said she wanted to meet with the witch. They didn't know what kind of a person she was.

Moreover, letting their master go on her own was completely out of the question.

So Alyssa and Reyna immediately ran after Abby.

"Let us take a carriage, it will be faster and more comfortable," Reyna said as Alyssa quickly arranged for a coachman to escort them.

Abby welcomed their aid as she boarded the carriage before her maids.

Just like the last time, it took around half an hour to reach the witch's hut.

Immediately, Abby could hear Mirella's voice. "You didn't disappoint me."

Abby was surprised a little when the witch sounded like she was expecting for herself to come here.

Micah looked at the rogue, whose legs and hands were tied behind his back while his mouth was stuffed with some cloth.

He was unconscious.

He turned to his royal gamma, who wouldn't stop grinning at him before pointing back at the subdued rogue.

"That's where my disguise went," Dax revealed, nodding at the cloth inside the rogue's mouth. He then answered the King's actual question.
