Chapter 23: Goblin Rider

Argon, who was floating above, closed his eyes and observed that the fight had already begun.

The humans seemed quite confident and underestimated the wolves, unaware that the monsters here were stronger than those outside.

To their surprise, the humans were caught off guard when they witnessed the green creatures riding the wolves. The two elders had assured them that there were only wolves here, but now they were faced with a new and unfamiliar creature.

A group of ten body-tempering humans found themselves surrounded by the five wolves and the green creatures riding them.

"Hey, do you know what race these creatures belong to?"

"I have no idea. It's the first time I'm seeing them. They don't resemble any monster clan I've come across in books."

"H$%#&gf@#&%$" (Kill all the humans that dare to invade our Lord's territory!)

The humans could only hear incomprehensible gibberish from the goblins before they launched their attack.

Although the humans fought back, they were taken aback to discover that these small green creatures were stronger than them.

Even in 2v1 fights, the humans found themselves at a disadvantage.

The wolves and goblins coordinated their attacks, striking fear into the hearts of the humans. After a few minutes of intense fighting, the humans suffered their first casualties. Like a domino effect, the casualties began to mount.

Caught off guard by the monsters' strength, the humans who had entered with confidence, particularly the three factions, now had their confidence shattered. Some humans had already started retreating.

While the goblins also suffered some casualties, it was significantly fewer compared to the humans.

The death ratio stood at 1 to 5, one goblin for every five humans.

Argon watched as his soul coins skyrocketed, going from zero to a hundred, then two hundred, and still climbing.

However, the increase slowed down as the humans began retreating.

"Now the humans know the strength of the goblin riders. They will be better prepared next time, and it won't be easy to defeat them." Goblin riders was the term he came up with. Additionally, since the two monsters fused, he could now directly buy a goblin rider in the system.

Although the price was double, he didn't mind at all. After all, the goblin riders consisted of two monsters.

Currently, he had three hundred soul coins, and next, he planned to purchase some goblin riders and fill the gaps in his monsters' cultivation, specifically the missing eighth and ninth-stage body tempering creatures.

Argon opened the shop and bought three ninth-stage and four eighth-stage creatures. He also added five seventh-stage body tempering goblin riders. Furthermore, he acquired an additional five goblin riders for each realm.
