Chapter 10

Ying Chengya's Warning

[The Novice missions are considered beneficial for newbies. In theory, you can get a lot of points, depending on how you complete the missions.]

She had already warned her family, so the system would only reward her with 5 points.

However, the importance of points was self-evident. With 500 points, she would be able to get rid of her illness and become a healthy person. Not only could she upgrade her combat strength, but she could also let the system develop more functions.

Without hesitation, Tang Susu decided to inform everyone around her about the impending doom to the point that no more relatives visited her parents. The only people left were her classmates.

Coincidentally, she and the female protagonist were enrolled in the same university, major, and even in the same class.

As for whether it would attract any trouble later on...

Now that there were many "cases" around the world, this one wouldn't attract too much attention.

It was just that she had never thought that someone would beat her to it.

When she opened the class group chat for the level 50 Law School (1) class, she found that there were already over 999 messages.

After scrolling for a long time, she realized that Ying Chengya had posted a video to the group—

In front of Room 906, a group of medical staff in tight protective clothing carried three stretchers out.

At the very front was the little girl whose internal organs had been dug out.

When they saw this, some people didn't dare to look anymore. They all began to wonder what this was. Props? A drama?

What was even more terrifying was that the second stretcher carried the male zombie that Tang Susu had killed.

There was a knife stuck in "his" head, and his brain was exposed. The blood that flowed out was black and sticky like asphalt. One could almost smell the stench through the screen!

Immediately, some girls protested and questioned Ying Chengya's intention. They almost vomited the dinner they had the night before.

Then, they saw the female zombie on the last stretcher. She was tied up, but she was still struggling and screaming.

A group of boys came to a sudden realization. They commented stuff like, "Escape Room" and "OMG" and even started to comment on it.

Just as everyone was having an intense discussion, Ying Chengya appeared again.

[This is a real incident that happened next door. When I passed by, I heard the doctor say that it was an infectious disease. There have been many cases in our city. Everyone please pay attention and be prepared!]

There was a moment of silence.

But very quickly, the screen was filled with comments of "hahaha!"

[It's hilarious. I didn't expect Chengya to make a joke.]

Obviously, no one believed her.

Tang Susu scrolled to the end, but she didn't see any reply from Ying Chengya. Her eyes darkened slightly.

In the game, the female protagonist also reminded those around her about the apocalypse, but she only did it the day before.

No one believed her either, but the female lead didn't stop there. Instead, she anxiously explained and repeatedly verified it with them.

It wasn't until the end of the world that they understood the female protagonist's good intentions, and they felt guilty and grateful to her.

The female protagonist gained countless reputation points because of this. In the game, others opened hell-level instance dungeons, but her journey was smooth all the way.

This "Ying Chengya" was clearly not the same as the female lead in the game. Who was she?

Tang Susu forwarded what she had posted in the group to her family group.

Tang Mingchu was the first to speak up. "What do you mean? She was at home? Then why didn't she move when we knocked on the door?"

It was a critical moment for the Tang family when they escaped from Room 906, but they still remembered Ying Chengya.

It was strange that she didn't open the door if she was at home... She would have heard the noise they made unless she was unconscious.

At this moment, Mr. Tang sent a voice message.

"I ran into Chengya just now. She told me she went out for a morning run and returned to see the doctor. She told us to be careful because she was afraid that this wouldn't be a peaceful period."

Tang Susu curled the corners of her lips slightly. Ying Chengya was at home but didn't open the door. She was afraid of being found out and even made up a lie in advance. Why was this female lead acting strangely?

[Host, the warning mission has been stolen. Are we going to complete it just like that?]

Susu raised her eyebrows slightly and said in a leisurely tone, "Don't worry. I still have a Plan B."
