

I QUIT MR 19

Chapter 19

The following morning at 9.00AM, Isabella sat in the Interview room and recalled what Natasha had said earlier in the morning, feeling both annoyed and amused. "You should go. Pick out some flawed candidates for him and see if he can bear it," she said.

However, Isabella dared not tease Seth. She hadn't even dared to do so when she was his executive secretary, let alone now. As a mere salesperson, she had to consider Jonas' disapproving attitude even when they wanted to take the day off, so crossing Seth would be asking for trouble.

All her former colleagues from the secretary department were present. Their expressions varied when they saw Isabella, but they still greeted her nonetheless. Only Fiona wore her heart on her sleeve and didn't greet Isabella.

Isabella thought Fiona was probably upset that she didn't get the position of executive secretary, and she couldn't help but smile wryly. Even a hot potato like Seth had people fighting over him.

"Isabella, shall we begin?" One of the secretaries, Ellie Gardner, asked for Isabella's opinion.

Isabella sat in the main seat, a bit surprised. "Are you the only interviewer?"

Ellie replied with a smile, "Mr. Shaffer still trusts you.

You have the final say.

Upon hearing that, Isabella furrowed her brows slightly, feeling somewhat uncomfortable when she sensed something amiss.

She adjusted her glasses. "Let them all in, then."

"Okay."

Isabella usually didn't wear glasses, but her face still bore some marks from the previous night's incident. It couldn't be concealed, so she had to wear glasses. With her glasses on, she exuded a cold demeanor. No one could guess the emotions in her eyes, which were hidden behind those lenses.

Three women came in for the first round of interviews.

All of them were graduates from prestigious universities and had impressive educational backgrounds. They were not only smart but also attractive. With their distinct features and shapely figures, they looked lively yet captivating.

“Most of your information is already on your resumes, so I won't ask about that.” Isabella closed the resumes and interlocked her hands. “Do any of you have boyfriends?”

The three women were momentarily taken aback but hesitated for a moment before answering in unison, "No."

Isabella pursed her lips, a glint of sharpness flashing in her eyes behind the glasses. "How about ex-boyfriends? How many partners have you had before?"

Since her question was too direct, it made the others feel uncomfortable.

"We just graduated. How many ex-boyfriends can we possibly have?" One of the girls with long hair couldn't help but frown. She sounded quite unfriendly.

Isabella's expression remained unchanged. "Miss Celia Stark, right?"

The woman with long hair snorted but didn't say anything.

Isabella continued coldly, "You had two ex-boyfriends in your freshman year. Then, during sophomore year, you hooked up with a wealthy man, almost driving his wife into ending her life.

You went abroad during the last two years of college and had six boyfriends. Five were foreigners, and the last one was biracial."

There were seven to eight people in the room, and they all couldn't help but click their tongues.

As soon as the first sentence was uttered, Celia instantly turned pale. By the time Isabella finished, the former's originally delicate and rosy face had turned as red as a beet.

She shot up from her chair and pointed at Isabella.

"Did you dig into my background?!"

With a polite yet cold smile, Isabella responded,

"Shaffer Group is one of the most comprehensive, leading enterprises in the country, and the value of the company's image is immeasurable. You are interviewing for the position of the president's executive secretary. If your private life is not in order and gets exposed in the future, people will go around saying there's a problematic president's secretary in the Shaffer Group. Do you think that'd be appropriate?"

After she spoke, everyone from the secretarial office found it reasonable. Even the candidates interviewing alongside Celia moved a bit farther away from her, afraid of being associated with her.

"You're insane!" Celia kicked a chair, not bothering to explain, and stormed out of the room.

Isabella remained unfazed and instructed someone to close the door.

"Deborah Barron, Madeleine Bradley," she announced calmly.

“My private life is pretty boring, to say the least.”

“Yeah, I’ve only had two boyfriends.”

Those two had short hair and looked witty. When they spoke, they had a kind of delicate and gentle charm that was characteristic of southern women.

Isabella smiled. “Both of you have gone under the knife, am I right?”

“Why does the company care if we’ve had plastic surgery or not?”

“Exactly. Is it wrong to make myself look prettier?”

Isabella remained composed and said calmly, “I assume you both have seen the recruitment advertisement. You know that the main body of this recruitment is not the Shaffer Group, right?”

Although the tiny print at the bottom called for a personal assistant, it was noticeable nonetheless.

Moreover, Seth’s appearance alone was enough to attract plenty of young women, even without his current status.

Sure enough, after Isabella finished speaking, both girls blushed.

They were both graduates in secretarial studies, so they naturally knew the specific requirements for personal assistant positions.

“Mr. Shaffer has very high requirements for his executive secretary. He values both hygiene and the natural human body. As for situations like what just happened, the probability of hygiene issues arising is too high. Therefore, we can't hire someone like that.”

With her arms crossed, Isabella leaned against the chair and lowered her gaze to Deborah's chest.

"Can both of you guarantee that the implants in your bodies won't deform due to vigorous activity?

Will it not affect.... suppleness?"

Pfft-

As soon as Isabella finished speaking, both interviewers from the secretary department spewed out their coffee before the interviewees could start feeling anxious. Then, they looked at Isabella with admiration.

"We thought a large corporation like Shaffer Group wouldn't be involved in such despicable dealings.

You've proved us wrong. This has gone overboard!"

The two girls who had undergone cosmetic surgery stood up in unison, indignant. Their words were filled with righteousness, claiming that they never had such impure intentions. They pointed at Isabella and delivered a moral critique before carrying their bags and storming away.

Keeping her expression composed, Isabella efficiently marked Xs on the three resumes. Then, she looked up. "Bring in the next batch."
