

I Have Immortalized: I Frankenstein by Simon E. Evans

Chapter 9

Authors Note: “Warning” story might contain mystery and strong language, readers discretion is advised.

Chapter 9 Life and death are equal and opposite

This isn't me, I said to myself. Looking at what seem so strange to me. I have now gone through the second wall, and inside a place that holds so much mystery, and I never would have thought of such a place in this underground realm, below earth's surface.

Following my entrance into this place where I later found some humanoid or hermaphrodite species a light appeared that gave me a clearer vision. This lights were transceivers by their very nature and quality, they were capable of illumining the darkness that also exist in this place.

What are those things standing out there?

This place was some kind of gigantic laboratory, with so much to feed my eyes on, and it occurred to me more evidently that someone has been here and something more serious has been going on here.

Every Corner of this laboratory were equipped with apparatus of various length, kind and degrees.

Some experiment and hypotheses and knowledge deeper than one could imagine, in total exhibition, pragmatically and creatively were trails of signs that never seem to elude my memory.

The more I gaze and viewed this place, some flash of memories took a grip on me, and they were like I've been in this kind of place before, and like I've been in existence before.

I Frankenstein Creature, wasn't in the best state of my mind, You see, Life and death are equal and opposite.

Living is one thing and dying is another, to embrace life, you should be willing to pay a common price.

If I was here before and now I am here again, what could that mean?

Something is beginning to happen to me, like I'm in a trance that cut through my entire diaphragm.

The voice, the beautiful voice that spoke to me while at the rivers beside the misty high mountains, uplands, wasn't even reprogramming in my memory, those standing objects in front of me, were the major thing that struck my attention and I begin approaching it.

They're some kind of hermaphrodite or humanoid specie.

They seem stationary but were making internal moves, like enormous living cells in a cage or house.

